Congressional Record.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS FOURTH SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 4, 1922.

The first Monday in December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the fourth session of the Sixty-seventh Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol at 12 o'clock meridian.

The VICE PRESIDENT (CALVIN COOLIDGE, of Massachusetts) called the Senate to order.

PRAYER.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father and our God, as we come together for this opening session we pray Thee for Thy blessing and guidance. We thank Thee for all the way Thou hast been leading us, for every mercy vouchsafed, and for Thy grace in time of need and of perplexity. We humbly beseech Thee that these days following may be freighted with Thy goodness and that great good may result therefrom. We ask in Jesus Christ's name. Amen.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour having arrived for the opening of the session of Congress, the Secretary will call the roll for the ascertainment of a quorum.

The reading clerk (John C. Crockett) called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 371), which was read by the Assistant Secretary (Henry M. Rose), considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 372), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. LODGE and Mr. UNDERWOOD the committee on the part of the Senate.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 373), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian until otherwise ordered.

Mr. LODGE. In order that the committee just appointed may have an opportunity to notify the President and to carry out the order of the Senate, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 5, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 4, 1922.

This being the day fixed by the Constitution for the annual meeting of the Congress of the United States, the House of Representatives of the Sixty-seventh Congress met in its Hall at 12 o'clock noon for its fourth session, and was called to order by the Speaker, Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT, a Representative from the State of Massachusetts.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, our heavenly Father, judge of all men, and unto whom all hearts are open, make Thy presence evident in the labor of this day and throughout this session. We believe that there is a guidance for each of us, and by thoughtful reflection and lowly listening we shall know the way. O may everything be lifted to the high level of unfailing devotion to the country that has called us. In the strain of toil, and it will come; in the fret of care, and it will disturb; in the maze of exactions, and they will entangle. O may courage be strong, vision clear, and all hearts kept pure. Enable us always to understand that happiness and well-being are the blessings which belong to a free people and reach back to the life and service of Him who glorified the virtue of self-sacrifice. Amen.

Frank W. Mondell.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and eighty Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

House Resolution 458.

Resolved, That a committee of three Members be appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives to join with the committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House is assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, and the Speaker appointed as the committee on the part of the House Mr. MONDELL, Mr. LONGWORTH, and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee.

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 459.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared, and that the House is ready to proceed with business.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I send the following resolution to the Clerk's desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 460.

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered the daily hour of meeting of the House of Representatives shall be 12 o'clock meridian.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

Also, Senate Resolution 372:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

And that in compliance with the foregoing resolution the Vice President had appointed members of said committee Mr. LODGE and Mr. UNDERWOOD.

REQUEST TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the charges filed with the Judiciary Committee by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KELLER] against the Attorney General and the Attorney General's answer thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Michigan also include that they be printed in parallel columns?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I did not do that, but I will be glad to do so.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. In eight-point type.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I will also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the statement made by the Attorney General.

Mr. WOODRUFF. That is included.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I object to both requests.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington objects to both requests.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. When the gentleman speaks of the statement of the Attorney General, does he refer to an interview?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Printed in this morning's paper.

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Objection has been made. I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EVERY HOME A SENTRY BOX.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, under leave to print given me by the House I desire respectfully to submit some suggestions as to a proper policy for our people and our Government as they were recently outlined by me in a letter to the Hon. Louis A. Coolidge, former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in his capacity as one of the incorporators of the new organization known as Sentinels of the Republic. In this letter I have endeavored to make clear in succinct form my earnest convictions concerning what I regard as, perhaps, the most important general political issue confronting the American people to-day and one upon which the future character of our Government and social order depends.

The letter follows:

I am sorry I shall not be table to get to Boston to-morrow to attend the mass meeting at Symphony Hall conducted by the newly organized Sentinels of the Republic to commemorate the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Samuel Adams. But I hope the best of success will crown this first public demonstration of the new society whose slogan is, "Every citizen a sentinel; every home a sentry box."

That last phrase tells the whole story. "Every home a sentry box." The genius of the English-speaking civilization from earliest days has ever made the hearthstone both the foundation and the shrine of its social order. Civic liberty was born at the fireside, was reared and made strong by experience in local self-government, and forever renewed itself in successive generations of men and women who did not expect the Nation's government to do for them what they ought to do for themselves at home.

This American experiment in civics was originally meant to be a popular government, deriving its just powers from the consent of the "governed," proceeding from the countless hearthstones of the land to Washington, and not descending from Washington upon the hearthstones. The sturdy old idea of a sturdy old generation was that that was the best government that governed least and still maintained a healthy social order. Faithful to that policy, free government in America waxed and prospered for many years.

But nowadays a misguided public interest is persistently uprooting the local self-government that has bred strong men and women for the conduct of national affairs, is centralizing the government in well-nigh innumerable bureaus and commissions at Washington, and through one device and another of paternalism is seducing the ancient spirit of independence and self-reliance among our people, gradually bringing them to be dependent upon the will and favor of politicians in the National Capital and implanting in them an ever-growing sense of irresponsibility and ease that can in the end but breed a generation of parasites and helpless dependents with whom no so-called free government could either actually govern or be free.

"Every home a sentry box." It is time to rouse the multitude to an understanding of the danger that confronts them and their children and their children's children. These paternalistic devices now being introduced to a people whose forebears would have indignantly repelled the attempt to pauperize them are but the vain inventions of political doctors who are desperately struggling to dose into a few more flickers of life the decaying civic institutions and social order of lands across the sea. They are desperate Old World attempts to keep an outraged multitude quiet yet a little while longer. They are Old World remedies brought over here to cure a country that isn't sick.

"Every home a sentry box." Let us highly resolve to restore the old balance of power between the States and the Federal Government in every respect consistent with national integrity and safety. Let us restore to the fullest practical measure the old spirit and policy of local self-government among our people. Let us bend our energies as far as may be upon the idea of developing the strength of the Nation through the nursery of the home and the home community. The Government at Washington can never be any stronger than the homes it comes out of. Let us maintain all the government we can at home, where we can keep our eyes on it.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. To-day is suspension day and the Unanimous Consent Calendar is in order. The Clerk will report the first bill on the calendar.

LAC DU FLAMBEAU BAND OF LAKE SUPERIOR CHIPPEWAS, WISCONSIN.

The first bill on the calendar was the bill (H. R. 6428) for the enrollment and allotment of the Lac du Flambeau Band of Lake Superior Chippewas in the State of Wisconsin, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. CARTER. Reserving the right to object, I ask that the bill be read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That within 90 days after the approval of this act the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to add to the existing rolls of the Lac du Flambeau Band of Chippewa Indians the names of all persons legally entitled to enrollment born prior to the approval of this act, including the issue of members of the band heretofore enrolled or who may be enrolled hereunder, such roll to constitute the final roll of the Lac du Flambeau Band. In the preparation of this roll the said Secretary shall be assisted by a committee of members of the said band duly appointed at a general council of the Lac du Flambeau Band called for that purpose. Immediately after the approval of the roll the Secretary of the Interior shall cause allotments of land within the Lac du Flambeau Indian Reservation to be made to the members of the band whose names appear on said additional roll (exclusive of the merchantable timber on such land) in conformity with the provisions of the treaty of September 30, 1854 (10 Stat. L., p. 1109), and acts of Congress applicable to allotting lands to members of an Indian tribe: Provided, That if there is not sufficient unappropriated land on the reservation to give each member the full acreage to which he or she is entitled, the Secretary of the Interior may prorate the lands as nearly as practicable among the members so enrolled. The patents for the allotments made hereunder shall issue to the allottees as early as practicable after the merchantable timber thereon has been removed and the right is hereby reserved to the United States to cut and market the merchantable timber on the lands so allotted, the proceeds to be disposed of as herein provided. When the merchantable timber has been cut from the lands so allotted the title to such timber as remains on said lands shall thereupon pass to the respective allottees: Provided further, That the land allotted or reserved hereunder shall be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country until otherwise provided by Congress.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to sell at the current market value in the year which the timber is cut or logged, the merchantable timber on the lands allotted under the provisions of this act under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, the net proceeds derived therefrom, together with any undistributed proceeds derived from the sale of timber heretofore cut and sold from such lands, shall be distributed per capita and paid to the members of the band enrolled under the provisions of this act where such members are or may hereafter be adjudged by the Secretary of the Interior to be competent to manage their own affairs and care for their own business; and in cases where members have not been adjudged competent by the Secretary of the Interior, their shares shall be deposited to their individual credit as individual Indian moneys are now deposited and paid to them or used for their benefit under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That of the amount now on deposit derived from the sale of tribal timber, at least $50,000 shall be distributed among the members enrolled under the provisions of this act as early as practicable after the approval of the roll as herein provided.

SEC. 3. That there be set aside for the village of Lac du Flambeau, lots 3 and 4 of section 8, and lots 3 and 4 of section 5, township 40 north, range 5 east; for the Indian village lots 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of section 1, and lots 1, 5, 6, and 7 of section 2, and lots 1, 2, and 3 of section 12, township 40 north, range 5 east, and for the school and agency farm approximately 200 acres of unappropriated land, and sections 6 and 7, township 40 north, range 5 east.

The following committee amendments were read.

Strike out all of section 3 of the bill and insert in lieu thereof a new section to be known as section 3 and to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That there be reserved from allotment or other disposition the following lands: For the village of Lac du Flambeau, the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter and lots 3 and 4 of section 5, and lots 3 and 4 of section 8, township 40 north, range 5 east; for the Indian village, lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of section 1, lots 1 and 7 of section 2, and lots 1, 2, and 3 of section 12, township 40 north, range 4 east; and for the school and agency farm, the unappropriated land in sections 6 and 7, township 40 north, range 5 east; that in the east half of section 31 and that in the west half of section 32, township 41 north, range 5 east."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CARTER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question or two about this legislation. This appears to be a bill for the final allotment of land to this band of Chippewa Indians, there having been an allotment made to a certain portion of them in the past. It also provides for the enrollment of Indians, some of whom have been born since the rolls were closed. Are there any others to be added to the rolls except the newly born?

Mr. ROACH. No; this completes the roll.

Mr. CARTER. Are there other Indians to be enrolled except those born since the last roll was closed?

Mr. ROACH. The principal number of Indians to be added are the newly born since the former allotment was made. There are a number that were not included in the former allotment that will be included in this, but only a few.

Mr. CARTER. Were those enrolled before and not allotted, or were they never enrolled?

Mr. ROACH. I am not able to answer that question. On the first page of the report it says:

It appears from the evidence considered by your committee that in the year 1903 approximately 45,000 acres of the reservation of the Lac du Flambeau Band of Lake Superior Chippewas was allotted to some 900 Indians in number on this reservation; that there remained approximately 24,500 acres of this reservation which has been unallotted, and that some 450 Indians would be benefited by the enactment of this legislation. These 450 Indians for the most part are Indians who have been born since the allotment above referred to. It is proposed by this bill to allot this remaining 24,500 acres of unallotted land to these new-born Indians.

Mr. CARTER. I understand that it says "for the most part," but I want to know what is meant by "the most part." Can the gentleman tell the House how many of these Indians who are to be reenrolled were living at the time of the last enrollment?

Mr. ROACH. I will state it in another way. Practically all of the 450 are new-born since the former enrollment was made.

Mr. CARTER. But there were some living at the time the former enrollment was made and not enrolled?

Mr. ROACH. A few, but I am not able to state the exact number. I made inquiry of the commissioner during the hearings, but do not now recall the number. Perhaps the gentleman from Wisconsin can give the number.

Mr. CARTER. Can the gentleman from Wisconsin tell us why they were not enrolled?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I can answer by saying that the exact number might be difficult to state. The department itself would be unable to do that, and in the report they say that approximately 450 will be the number, most of whom have been born since the last allotment. They believe that 450 is about as near the number as can be ascertained, and that that is the number among whom the 24,500 acres allotable is to be allotted.

I will read a letter that I received November 3. As the gentleman knows, this bill has been up once or twice, and the question has been raised, Is the Interior Department and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs definitely committed to this legislation and is there any reason why the legislation should not be passed? For the information of the committee and in direct answer to the question of the gentleman from Oklahoma, I would like to insert a letter which I received on November 3 from Commissioner Burke in reference to this particular bill. The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, November 3, 1922.

Hon. A. P. NELSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. NELSON: Your letter of October 30, in relation to the passage of H. R. 6428 (67th Cong., 2d sess.), a bill for the enrollment and allotment of the Lac du Flambeau Indians, has been received.

I note what you say with reference to the consideration of the bill coming under the Unanimous Consent Calendar shortly after the convening of Congress.

I wish to advise you that the measure to which you refer has twice been favorably reported upon by the department and has the unqualified approval of this office in the event of the minor amendment in section 3 thereof, which has been referred to in the reports mentioned. Copies of the reports referred to are inclosed.

Our office is heartily in favor of allotting all the available tribal lands at Lac du Flambeau Reservation to the members of the band who are now living and entitled to allotments. Our records show that there are approximately 24,580 acres available for allotment purposes and that there are approximately 450 members of the band who have not received allotments. It will be seen that the allotment of the entire acreage to the unallotted members would give them about 54 acres each.

I am not aware of anything I could say at this time which would more clearly and definitely indicate our approval of the measure under consideration.

Cordially yours, CHAS. H. BURKE, Commissioner.

Mr. CARTER. Does the gentleman know whether there is any treaty with reference to the allotment of these lands to these particular Indians?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Only the general treaty of September 30, 1854.

Mr. CARTER. Has there ever been any treaty with reference to the final closing of the roll of this band of Indians?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. I would not make a definite answer because I wish to be correct, but my best information in going over the matter with Commissioner Burke, and particularly Assistant Commissioner Meritt, is that there was nothing in the consideration of this bill as far as treaties are concerned with the rights of the Indians that could be questioned.

Mr. CARTER. Here is the difficulty I am trying to avoid. If you have a treaty with the Indians providing for the closing of the rolls at a certain time and the rolls were closed at that time, then if you undertake to add other names to the roll you probably would involve the Government in a suit for recovery by these Indians already on the roll.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Does not the gentleman think that the commissioner, with his usual thorough and careful consideration of all subjects, has taken all these matters into consideration with reference to this legislation, especially in view of his three letters of approval? The commissioner makes the reply that he does in response to my direct question, which I have already stated. This matter has also been in the regular council, and has been approved there by a majority of the Indians.

Mr. CARTER. I want to say to the gentleman that I have very great confidence in the ability, the understanding, and the integrity of the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and I am sure, if he has given a favorable report upon the bill, he has considered all of these questions. However, the report of the committee does not print any statement upon the bill from the commissioner or the Secretary of the Interior, and that is why I ask the question. We have had similar cases where we have closed the rolls of tribes by a treaty. Afterwards we would reopen those rolls by statute, and in every instance the Indians have come back on the Government. They have been sent to the Court of Claims and they have recovered.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Speaker, the assistant commissioner, Mr. Meritt, appeared before the subcommittee handling this legislation, of which I was the chairman. He stated that the purpose of the legislation was to close up the affairs of this tribe. I assume from his statement that the purpose of the legislation being to "close up the affairs of the Lac du Flambeau Tribe," that heretofore it had not been closed up. Else he would not have made that statement.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROACH. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman understand by this legislation that it actually closes the rolls and that there will be no further distribution?

Mr. ROACH. This legislation will close the rolls. The question was asked as to whether there had been a former closing of the rolls, and I assumed from the statement of the assistant commissioner, to which I have just referred, that the former allotment had not closed the rolls.

Mr. SNELL. How much money is there in the Treasury at the present time that is available for this distribution? I notice this bill provides for distributing $50,000.

Mr. ROACH. This money to be distributed is from the sale of timber to be sold.

Mr. SNELL. I notice the provision in line 20, page 3—that of the amount now on deposit derived from the sale of tribal timber at least $50,000 shall be distributed—

And so forth. There is some money in the Treasury at the present time?

Mr. ROACH. Twenty-four thousand five hundred and eighty-eight dollars in the Treasury at the present time.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand there is only $24,588 on deposit at the present time?

Mr. ROACH. Twenty-four thousand five hundred and eighty-eight dollars.

Mr. SNELL. How can you distribute $50,000 out of $24,500?

Mr. ROACH. From the sale of this timber. This bill provides for the sale of certain timber by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SNELL. But the bill provides for a distribution of $50,000 out of the money now on deposit.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. I think the gentleman is mistaken. There are 24,500 acres of land yet to be distributed and allotted.

Mr. SNELL. Can the gentleman from Wisconsin tell me how much money there is on hand?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Approximately $50,000 on deposit at the present time.

Mr. SNELL. How long has that money been there?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. I would not be able to say the exact time, but, no doubt, it has been received from the sale of timber.

Mr. SNELL. As the gentleman understands this legislation, it actually closes up this whole transaction and we wipe it off the slate?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Yes. I have gone over the matter very thoroughly with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the bureau is just as anxious as it can be to have the whole matter settled and finally disposed of. It has been hanging fire for a long while, and the only reasonable way to do it is to get it settled as the department desires, as it has indicated that it should be done.

Mr. CARTER. This is probably what has happened with reference to the money in the Treasury. The timber is being sold now, is it not?

Mr. ROACH. This bill authorizes the sale of the timber.

Mr. CARTER. What the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] is trying to get at is how it is you have a statement in the report of only $24,000 in the Treasury.

Mr. SNELL. That is an error.

Mr. CARTER. And yet you have $50,000 provided for in the bill.

Mr. ROACH. I do not think it is a mistake.

Mr. SNELL. You can not distribute $50,000 out of $24,000.

Mr. ROACH. This authorizes the sale of timber, and that, together with the money on deposit, would make up the amount.

Mr. CARTER. Perhaps some other sales have been made since then, and that money has been accumulating since the information came to the committee. Some reservations are made here. Three reservations seem to be made—one for the village of Lac du Flambeau, one for the Indian village, and another for the school and agency farm. How much is reserved in those three reservations?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Approximately 40 acres. That is for school purposes.

Mr. CARTER. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that, because in the bill there are two quarters of a quarter section, which would be 40 acres each, which would make 80 acres.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Forty acres are reserved distinctly for village purposes.

Mr. CARTER. Three hundred and twenty acres seem to be reserved in the east half of section 31.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Yes; but if the gentleman will notice there are reservations for several purposes, such as village and school and agency farm.

Mr. CARTER. I understand. Just what is the proper definition of "merchantable timber"? Can the gentleman tell us?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Anything that will sell on the market.

Mr. CARTER. That does not mean dead and down timber; it means anything that can be sold to a sawmill?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what does this do with these Indians; take them out from under the jurisdiction of the Government so as to cease paying for them?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. No; it does not take them from the jurisdiction of the Government. This does not change the status quo at all. This land is to be allotted so as to give him a place to live on. Certainly the purpose of the department, as far as possible, is to make these Indians self-supporting wherever they can do so, and if they can get a small piece of land where they can build a home, why, that will tend in that direction.

Mr. MACGREGOR. And in the meantime cutting all the timber from the land, denuding it and selling it, and there is $50,000 to be distributed among the members enrolled under the provisions of this act.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. And it is for the best interests of the Indians and the department that the merchantable timber shall be sold.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield? I think it is important that we know about the money. It has been stated that there was $50,000, whereas it distinctly states on page 2 of the report that the amount on deposit in the Treasury is only $24,988. Now, line 21, page 3, of the bill contains the provision for distributing $50,000 of the money now on deposit. I think the amount should be absolutely known before we allow this legislation to go through. You can not distribute $50,000 out of $24,000.

Mr. ROACH. Where is that?

Mr. SNELL. Page 3, line 20. "Provided, That of the amount now on deposit derived from the sale of tribal timber at least $50,000 shall be distributed."

Mr. ROACH. There are certain timber contracts. This timber is sold under contract and annual payments are now being made to the trust fund. Now, I do not believe that the money derived from the sale of that timber is included in this $24,988. It is the sum to be derived from the sale of timber, and from what money is already on hand the distribution of the $50,000 is to be made. This is a general statement of the affairs of the Lac du Flambeau Indians, of their financial condition, property held, and so forth.

Mr. CARTER. I notice in line 15, page 2, provision is made as follows:

> The patents for the allotments made hereunder shall issue to the allottees as early as practicable after the merchantable timber thereon has been removed, and the right is hereby reserved to the United States to cut and market the merchantable timber on the land so allotted, the proceeds to be disposed of as herein provided. When the merchantable timber has been cut from the land so allotted the title to such timber as remains on said land shall thereupon pass to the respective allottees.

It says that allotment shall be made in conformity with the provisions of the treaty of September 30, 1854. Now, can the gentleman tell me when this land is allotted to the Indians whether they will have the right of alienation or not?

Mr. ROACH. Pardon me, but I was talking to a gentleman and did not hear your question.

Mr. CARTER. When this land is allotted to the Indians there does not seem to be any restrictions as to sale, and so forth, placed in this bill. Now, will the Indians be permitted to alienate? Can the gentleman tell us that?

Mr. ROACH. No, I could not; but I do not think they would.

Mr. CARTER. That is a very important thing. Unless there is some restriction as to sale, taxation, and incumbrance placed by the law these people might be left homeless within a very short time.

Mr. ROACH. I am of the opinion that the general law relating to the Indian tribes takes care of that, and that only competent Indians can alienate after they have received patents in fee.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. The gentleman appreciates the fact that these little details possibly ought to be clearly set forth, but I want to assure him of this fact, that with a bill of this kind it is very difficult to state in full all of these technical details. I want to say to the gentleman, however, that it does seem to me that with the commissioner of the bureau and with the assistant commissioner of the bureau having gone over these matters thoroughly and having made two separate favorable reports in which they approve the bill unqualifiedly, there should be no objection to its passage.

Mr. CARTER. Doubtless they have. As I say, I have a very high regard for the commissioner, but I might disagree with him as to whether these Indians should be permitted to alienate. That is a very important matter.

Mr. ROACH. I will say this to the gentleman, that there has already been allotted to this same tribe of Indians 45,756 acres, and I presume that this allotment among these 450 Indians will be upon the same basis and on the same terms as the allotments of their ancestors, those who have previously been allotted. There should not be any difference between this allotment and the former allotments in this particular tribe.

Mr. CARTER. Under the former allotments, made under the treaty, were restricted Indians permitted to alienate their lands?

Mr. ROACH. I presume that inasmuch as their affairs are still administered by the Committee on Indian Affairs they are not permitted to alienate their land.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, no; it would still be necessary to administer the tribal affairs even though these restrictions were not removed.

Mr. ROACH. The gentleman will understand that it would be only fair that these 450 should be allotted in the same manner.

Mr. CARTER. I recall a similar mistake being made with another band of the Chippewas, known as the White Earth Band, and a great many of those Indians lost their entire property because there was placed in the bill a permission to permit a mixed-blood Indian to alienate his title. The roll did not distinguish the pure bloods from the mixed bloods. There being no other determining factor, the Indian would go into court and swear that he was a mixed blood, and it entailed no end of litigation and a considerable loss of property to the Indians in that particular section of country.

Mr. ROACH. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs and is more familiar with this matter than I am. It is my impression that the Indians to be allotted under this provision will not be permitted by the Secretary of the Interior to alienate their lands and that the general law would prohibit them from doing so.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] recalls that this whole Chippewa matter is very much mixed up; particularly the Red Earth and the White Earth Bands have their affairs mixed up.

Mr. CARTER. Yes. It is the most complicated Indian problem I know of; the only thing that is more complicated is the Federal Government itself. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROACH. But there is nothing particularly complicated about this legislation.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROACH. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. What proportion of these Indians have been declared to be competent to manage their own affairs?

Mr. ROACH. As I recall the statement of the Assistant Commissioner, Mr. Meritt, made before our committee, it has been some time since the hearings were held; he stated that the larger number of these 450 are minors. I do not remember now the exact number. I have the exact data, however, in my office.

Mr. SNELL. Can the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. A. P. NELSON] give us the proportion in that number?

Mr. A. P. NELSON. I could not give that information.

Mr. SNELL. I think the provision should be amended on page 3, lines 20 and 21, so that the distribution proposed shall also include the money to be derived from the sale of timber.

Mr. ROACH. I will have no objection to that, but I have not the necessary information before me.

Mr. SNELL. If you have not the money now on hand, you certainly could not distribute it.

Mr. ARENTZ. On page 3, line 20, I suggest after the word "deposit" that the words "and hereafter" be inserted, so that it will read, "that of the amount now on deposit and hereafter derived from the sale of tribal timber," and so forth.

Mr. ROACH. I have no objection to that if it will satisfy the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Reserving still further the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill as to a provision in section 2. I think an amendment should be inserted at about line 4, providing that the Indian council that is now in existence in this band might have the right to act, along with the Secretary of the Interior, in the sale of this merchantable timber. It seems to me that this band should have its tribal council acting with the Commissioner in the sale of timber. I should like to offer an amendment of that kind and I do not think there will be any objection to it.

Mr. ROACH. Well, I will accept such an amendment on that point if the gentleman desires to offer it.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, is this bill up for consideration?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Then I object.

Mr. ROACH. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice and retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I have no objection.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—REPORT OF THE BUDGET.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying document, referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith the Budget of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, which is summarized in the following statement:

Budget summary.

[Exclusive of postal revenues and postal expenditures paid from postal revenues.]

	Estimated, 1924.	Estimated, 1923.	Actual, 1922.
Total receipts	$3,361,812,359	$3,429,862,959	$4,109,104,150.94
Total expenditures (including reduction of the public debt required by law to be made from ordinary receipts)	3,180,843,234	3,703,801,671	3,795,302,499.84
Excess of expenditures		273,938,712
Excess of receipts	180,969,125		313,801,651.10

In the Budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, transmitted to Congress December 5, 1921, the estimated receipts for the fiscal year 1922 were $3,943,453,663, and the estimated expenditures $3,967,922,366, thus forecasting an apparent excess of expenditures over receipts of $24,468,703. At the close of business on June 30, 1922, it was found that the actual receipts for the fiscal year 1922 were $4,109,104,150.94 and the actual expenditures $3,795,302,499.84, making an excess of receipts over expenditures of $313,801,651.10. That we closed the fiscal year 1922 with a surplus of $313,801,651.10 instead of an estimated deficit of $24,468,703 was due in no small measure to the fact that at the beginning of the fiscal year 1922 a system of financial control was established in the executive branch of the Government under the Budget system. Immediately upon the commencement of the fiscal year 1922 Executive pressure for the closest economies was brought to bear upon the business organization of the Government. For the first time in the history of this country coordination was established in the routine business of the Government and the departments and establishments thus brought together in a common effort for economy.

While the estimate of receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year 1923 as made at the time of the presentation of the Budget in December, 1921, indicated that the receipts would be $3,338,182,750 and the expenditures $3,505,754,727, a revision of the prospective receipts and expenditures made on July 1, 1922, the commencement of the fiscal year, indicated that the receipts would be $3,073,825,311 and the expenditures $3,771,258,542. That revised estimate indicated an excess of expenditures over receipts of $697,433,231.

As a result, however, of the operations of the first five months of the current fiscal year, a revised estimate of receipts has now been made showing a total of $3,429,862,959. The considerable increase over the July estimate is due to the stimulation in the collection of ordinary receipts aided by an increase in the customs revenues. On the other hand, due to continued pressure for economies and a revision of the expenditure program based on five months of actual operation, it is now estimated that the expenditures for the fiscal year 1923 will be $3,703,801,671. These revised figures indicate an apparent prospective deficit of $273,938,712. I am hopeful, however, that the conditions on which this estimate is predicated will change for the better in the ensuing months of the fiscal year and that the close of the year will show a balanced account.

It is well to mention that of the total estimated expenditures of $3,703,801,671 for the fiscal year 1923, approximately $2,000,000,000 will be expended in the payment of pensions, payments to or on behalf of World War veterans, interest on the public debt, and for the reduction of the public debt required by law to be made from ordinary receipts.

This estimate of expenditures during the fiscal year 1923 includes the amount of the difference between the cash receipts from sales of war savings stamps, series of 1918, and their face value, which series becomes due January 1, 1923. This amount of approximately $125,000,000 represents discount accruals covering a period of five years, and while not an expenditure properly chargeable against the ordinary receipts of 1923 must be met this fiscal year, and therefore has been included in this year's estimated expenditures.

We now come to the Budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924. It is estimated that the total ordinary receipts from all sources, excluding the Postal Service, will be $3,361,812,359. This is $747,291,791.94 less than the actual receipts for 1922 and $68,050,600 less than the estimated receipts for 1923. The items which make up this estimated total for 1924 are compared with similar items for the two preceding years, as follows:

Receipts.

Source.	1924	1923	1922
Internal-revenue receipts	$2,425,000,000	$2,400,000,000	$3,213,253,250.79
Customs receipts	425,000,000	450,000,000	356,443,387.18
Miscellaneous receipts:
Interest, premium, and discount	252,863,263	237,800,455	57,460,287.03
Sale of Government properties	35,404,410	95,839,125	116,267,787.96
Public domain receipts	16,149,650	16,214,000	16,334,905.64
Franchise tax, Federal reserve banks	10,000,000	10,000,000	50,974,465.64
Profits on coinage, bullion deposits, etc	10,000,000	17,000,000	21,600,921.07
Fees, fines, and forfeitures	33,000,642	31,295,357	32,539,330.35
Repayments of foreign loans and other investments	89,175,000	58,643,000	120,658,729.93
District of Columbia receipts	15,506,500	16,363,415	15,235,016.44
Panama Canal receipts	14,224,000	13,924,000	11,747,092.47
Trust fund receipts	65,319,170	61,196,522	57,939,581.32
Other sources	20,169,713	21,506,485	29,589,693.22
Total miscellaneous receipts	511,812,359	579,862,959	539,407,509.97
Total receipts, all sources	3,361,812,359	3,429,862,959	4,109,104,150.94

The estimate of expenditures for the fiscal year 1924 is $3,180,843,234. This is the amount which it is estimated will be withdrawn from the Treasury during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924. This estimate of cash withdrawal is to be distinguished from the estimate of appropriations contained in the Budget, since withdrawals during the fiscal year will be made from appropriations heretofore made as well as from appropriations recommended in this Budget. Furthermore, a portion of the money to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1924 will not be withdrawn from the Treasury until after the close of that fiscal year.

These expenditures may be divided into two general classes, those which partake of the nature of fixed charges and are not generally subject to administrative control, and those which are subject to administrative control.

Included within the first class are pensions, payments to or on behalf of World War veterans, interest on the public debt, and the reduction of the public debt required by law to be made from the ordinary receipts of the Government. These items, together with certain other, but smaller, items not generally subject to administrative control, represent about two-thirds of the estimated expenditures, leaving approximately $1,000,000,000 subject to administrative control.

The foregoing does not include expenditures for the Postal Service and the Post Office Department payable from postal revenues. Such expenditures for the fiscal year 1922 were $545,666,582.28, a deficiency of $64,346,234.52, payable from ordinary receipts, being included in the ordinary expenditures for 1922 hereinbefore mentioned. The estimated expenditures from postal revenues during 1923 are $559,996,841.69, an estimated deficiency of $31,502,570.76 being included in the estimated ordinary expenditures for 1923. The estimated expenditures from postal revenues for 1924 are $584,653,151.50, and it is estimated that through proper readjustments there will be a surplus of postal revenues over expenditures amounting to $952,439.56 for that year.

That we approach the commencement of the fiscal year 1924 with an estimated surplus for that year of $180,969,125 is certainly most encouraging. While I am hopeful that there will be no deficit in the current fiscal year, 1923, if such a deficit does occur this surplus for 1924 will give a margin to take care of it.

Successful management of the public debt in the transactions involving large refunding operations is essential to the public credit and closely related to successful Budget operations. The Treasury Department has been carrying out a program of orderly funding and gradual liquidation of the public debt. On June 30, 1922, the gross public debt was $22,963,381,708.31, as compared with $23,977,450,552.54 on June 30, 1921, showing a reduction of $1,014,068,844.23 during the fiscal year 1922. This reduction was accomplished through the following means: First, in the amount of $422,694,600, through the cumulative sinking fund and other public debt expenditures payable from certain specific receipts; second, in the amount of $277,572,593.13, through the reduction in the net balance in the general fund of the Treasury; and third, in the amount of $313,801,-

On April 30, 1921, the short-term outstanding debt maturing before June 30, 1923, was more than $7,500,000,000, which through the reductions referred to and refunding operations was reduced to about $4,500,000,000 on June 30, 1922, and up to November 15, 1922, this amount had been further reduced to approximately $3,000,000,000. These refunding operations have involved the issue on October 16, 1922, of approximately $750,000,000 long-term bonds and the issue of Treasury notes aggregating $2,743,334,000 maturing as follows: $701,897,700 during 1924, $936,727,700 during 1925, and $1,104,708,600 during 1926. These refunding operations are carried on for the purpose of changing the maturity date of public debt obligations and thus to avoid the necessity for meeting obligations of many billions of dollars at one time. The resulting distribution of maturities does not indicate a reduction in the total of such obligations.

We now come to the estimates of appropriations for 1924, amounting to $3,078,940,331.49. This is $195,298,359.14 less than the appropriations already made for the current fiscal year, 1923. Early in July I called together in open meeting for the third time the executives constituting the business establishment of the Government and at that time further emphasized the need of more rigid economy in the expenditure of public funds. I stated that the estimated receipts for the fiscal year 1924 would not permit so liberal appropriations for that year as had been made for the current fiscal year, 1923. The preparation of the estimates of appropriations as they appear in the Budget was controlled by this policy. While it may be possible to make a small reduction in an item here and there, any material reduction will necessitate a change in the administrative policy upon which estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1924 are based. I am giving below a comparative statement of the estimates of appropriations for 1924 and appropriations for 1923.

Comparative statement of estimates of appropriations for 1924 and appropriations for 1923.

Statement No. 8 of the Budget gives a functional classification of the estimates for the fiscal year 1924, which will be found interesting and informative, showing as it does the approximate amounts devoted to important Government activities and interests. This classification has four general divisions—general functions, military functions, civil functions, and a grouping of the non-functional appropriations.

It will be found that a total of $103,070,886 is carried for general functions, which include the legislative, judicial, executive, and the general administrative operations of the Government which can not be allocated to specific civil functions.

The sum of $1,256,715,939 is provided for military functions, which include military pensions, retirement pay, annuities and World War allowances, and national defense.

The amount recommended for national defense is divided into two classes: Army, $256,552,887; Navy, $289,880,993.

The amount recommended for the maintenance and operation of the Army will provide for a Regular Army of 12,000 officers and 125,000 enlisted men, exclusive of the Philippine Scouts, which is the force now authorized by Congress; will provide for the training of 15,000 reserve officers for a period of 15 days and for 150 for a period of three months, as against a total of only 5,000 for 15 days during the current fiscal year; will provide for the attendance of 38,000 men at civilian military training camps as against 27,000 during this current fiscal year; and will enable the Militia Bureau to increase the strength of the National Guard from 160,000 officers and men—the strength on June 30, 1922—to 215,000 officers and men. While no increase in the number of students enrolled at Reserve Officers' Training Corps units at schools and colleges—now totaling 96,000 students in 225 institutions—is provided, the funds recommended, however, will enable a larger number of these students to be given both basic and advanced courses of instruction.

The funds recommended will provide for all essentials connected with the upkeep of all military posts, camps, and stations, the Army transport service, the coast defenses of the United States, Panama and insular possessions, and other military activities, and, in addition, allow $3,166,767 for new construction at military posts and $750,000 toward the replacement of worn-out portions of the Alaska cable. For the Air Service the amount recommended is $12,871,500, which is $23,500 less than the 1923 appropriation, and will permit this service to operate efficiently in accordance with existing policy. For the United States Military Academy at West Point $2,066,428 is recommended, an increase of $6,799 over 1923.

The amount recommended for the Navy will provide for the present enlisted personnel of 86,000 men; will maintain all present ships in commission; will increase the steaming radius of capital ships from 13,080 miles to 16,200 miles, and other ships proportionately; will provide training for 2,000 officers and 7,000 men in the Naval Reserve; and will make provision for continuing all new ship construction in privately owned yards, except for reduction in speed of construction on three light cruisers; for suspending the construction of four auxiliaries in navy yards and reducing the speed of construction on two fleet submarines.

The amount provided in the Budget for military pensions and allowances includes $253,000,000 for pensions, $434,584,050 for World War allowances, and $20,389,289 for retirement pay.

The amount recommended for civil functions totals $953,599,096. Under this general function $14,587,167 is allowed for foreign relations and protection of American interests abroad; $18,553,686 for general law enforcement, which includes activities having to do with the enforcement of general laws and the administration and enforcement of special acts like the national prohibition act, the narcotic act, and the investigation and prosecution of war-contract frauds; $7,199,000 for the control of currency and banking; $12,584,305 for the administration of Indian affairs; $17,582,018 for the administration of public domain, which includes those activities of the Government having to do with the care and utilization of public lands and the care and utilization of national forests; $11,991,909 for the promotion and regulation of commerce and industry, which includes the activities of the Tariff Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, the Patent Office, and those activities of the Departments of Agriculture and Commerce having to do with the promotion and regulation of commerce and industry; $79,491,905 for the promotion, regulation, and operation of marine transportation, which includes $50,411,500 for the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation; $4,514,900 for the promotion and regulation of land transportation; $590,171,942 for the Postal Service and land telegraph and telegraphic communication, which includes $590,166,192 for the Postal Service; $24,876,799 for the promotion and regulation of agriculture; $1,244,090 for the promotion and regulation of fisheries; $4,718,030 for the promotion of labor interests; $3,871,210 for immigration and naturalization; $15,877,339 for promotion of public health; $10,151,060 for promotion of public education; $10,619,456 for science and research; $29,563,110 for local government, including the District of Columbia; and $228,050 for civil relief.

For public works, under civil functions, $96,197,030 is carried, which includes $41,764,550 for rivers and harbors proper and items of similar character; $31,480,000 for roads; $6,889,105 for Panama Canal; $4,750,000 for Reclamation Service; $2,200,000 for railroads in Alaska; $5,728,950 for hospital construction and facilities for war patients, and $3,384,425 for other public improvements and Government plant additions.

Under nonfunctional appropriations is carried a total of $1,355,720,602, which includes $36,187,059 for refunds, losses, contingencies, and miscellaneous; $345,097,000 for public-debt retirements payable from ordinary receipts; $950,000,000 for interest on the public debt, and $24,436,543 for disbursement of trust funds.

It seems appropriate here to consider the course of the retrenchment policy of the Government since the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the year in which the armistice was signed. Exclusive of expenditures made in the reduction of the public debt, the total expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, were $6,403,343,841.21. The expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, including $422,281,500 on account of reduction of the public debt payable from ordinary receipts, under the new cumulative sinking fund, were $5,538,209,189.30. This was further reduced for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, to $3,795,302,499.84. As I have previously stated, the estimated expenditures for 1923 are $3,703,801,671, while the Budget for 1924 estimates the expenditures at $3,180,843,234 for that year. These figures show a most satisfactory reduction in the expenditure of public moneys since 1919.

Can there be a reasonable expectation for further considerable reduction in governmental expenditures in the near future? This question is no doubt upon the lips of many. The burden of taxation caused by the World War has borne heavily upon us all, and it has been the earnest desire of the Government to reduce this burden to the minimum consistent with a proper functioning of the Federal services. We have seen, however, that approximately two-thirds of the taxes collected go to pay certain fixed charges, over the expenditure of which there can be exercised little or no administrative control. The interest on the public debt, the chief of the fixed charges, must be paid. This will be $950,000,000 for the fiscal year 1924, constituting nearly one-third of the total expenditures of the Government. Among these are also certain permanent and indefinite appropriations for various purposes and certain large annual appropriations sanctioned by law and by public opinion.

After deducting these items there is left, as has been shown, approximately only $1,000,000,000, out of which these normal operating expenses of the Government must be paid. It is against this group of expenditures that the retrenchment policy of the Government has been directed. Never before in our financial history has there been such close scrutiny on the part of both the Executive and the Congress of every item which contemplates expenditures for the support of the Government. Not only have the departments themselves set up agencies of control both in the preparation of their estimates and over their expenditures but the pressure of the Executive has been directed toward effecting economies in these ordinary governmental operations.

A reduction in expenditures would undoubtedly result from a reorganization of the departments and establishments upon a more scientific basis, but we can not look to this alone to effect such a material reduction in cost of Government operation as would justify the expression of hope for a considerable lessening of expenditures in the years to come.

There is, however, another field of Government operation—a rapidly broadening field of Government expenditure—which may be discussed with profit to us all. I refer to expenditures which are being made from appropriations for Federal aid in lines of research, improvement, and development which, while having no direct connection with the operations of the business of government, have grown to become a recognized part of its activities. It is not easy, therefore, to divorce from our minds the fact that considerable of the moneys appropriated for the Government are spent for those things which do not pertain to the normal functions or operations of the business of government. There is question as to how far the Government should participate in these extraneous activities, and I am frank to say that an answer to the question as to whether we can look forward to any further material reduction in the expenditures of the Government in future years depends largely upon whether or not there will be a curtailment or expansion of these activities, which have already added greatly to the annual drafts upon the Treasury of the United States. These extraneous activities have flowed from the laws enacted pursuant to popular demand, and I take this occasion to refer to them for the purpose of showing that the taxation which necessarily results in providing funds to meet them is a necessary incident to the fulfillment of the popular demand.

In the efforts which have been directed to reducing public expenditures I have been much concerned in apparent increasing State, county, and municipal indebtedness, and I am fearful lest this condition may be in part attributable to the expenditures made by the Government pursuant to its Federal aid laws, as many of these laws require State contributions as a prerequisite to the extension of the Federal aid. Certainly an expression by the Government that it is willing to bear a proportionate part of the cost of certain aid work is an incentive to the States to contribute their share, and it is only natural that this should lead to the increasing State, county, and municipal indebtedness.

In adapting its procedure to the needs of the new Budget system, I fully realize the far-reaching changes which Congress made in its organization. While the Budget bill was pending the House, in anticipation of its final enactment, changed its rules in order to centralize authority and responsibility over appropriation measures; and, further, when the President last year transmitted the Budget, prepared according to the form and contents of the old Book of Estimates, and an alternative budget, prepared according to a logical grouping of governmental services, the House forthwith adopted the alternative budget and changed the form of the appropriation bills to conform to the chapters of such alternative budget. This was a change of far-reaching importance. Following the action of the House, the Senate reorganized its committee system for the consideration of appropriation bills, centralizing authority and responsibility in its Committee on Appropriations.

The President has received from Congress during this formative period of the Budget system the most hearty cooperation at all times. Many conferences with the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate were necessary in order to establish the form of the Budget. We were working in virgin soil, establishing new methods of financial procedure. I am glad to say that no important step has been taken by the Executive, even though the matter involved might be of purely executive concern, without first discussing the matter with your Appropriations Committees, and I desire to express my appreciation of the helpful spirit always evidenced by them whenever we had occasion to come together for the mutual consideration of questions of budgetary principle or procedure. I may say without fear of exaggeration that we have been during the past two years colaborers in the greatest reform in our financial history.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 4, 1922.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO WAIT ON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, your Committee appointed on behalf of the House to join with a like committee of the Senate to notify the President that the Congress has assembled, with a quorum of the two Houses present and ready to receive any message he might be pleased to transmit, performed that duty, and beg leave to report that the President informed us that he would communicate with the Congress in person at a date to be hereafter fixed, in the near future, some time this week.

PENSIONS.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from further consideration of Senate bill 3275, agree to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, including amendment of the title, and pass the bill as amended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of Senate bill 3275, agree to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, including amendment of the title, and pass the bill as amended in the form the Clerk will report.

Mr. FULLER. When the Clerk reads, will the substitute be read in lieu of the original bill?

The SPEAKER. It will.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3275) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Army nurses, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That any officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States for 90 days or more during the Civil War, and was honorably discharged from such service, or regardless of length of service was discharged for a disability incurred in service and in line of duty, or whose name is now on the pension roll as a Civil War veteran, and every person who served 60 days or more in the war with Mexico, or on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto during the war with that nation, and was honorably discharged therefrom, shall be paid a pension at the rate of $72 a month.

SEC. 2. That the widow of any officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States for 90 days or more during the Civil War, and was honorably discharged from such service, or regardless of length of service was discharged for a disability incurred in service and in line of duty, or who died in the service of a disability incurred in service and in line of duty, or who has heretofore been or may hereafter be granted a pension for service in the Civil War, such widow having been married to such soldier, sailor, or marine prior to the 27th day of June, 1915, or who if married after said date shall have lived and cohabited with the soldier, sailor, or marine for at least two years and continuing until his death, shall be paid a pension at the rate of $50 a month, and an additional pension of $6 a month for each child of the officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow leaving a child or children of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of 16 years: Provided, That in case a minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise mentally or physically helpless, the pension shall continue during the life of such child, or during the period of such disability: Provided further, That the additional pension herein granted to the widow on account of the child or children of the husband by a former wife shall be paid to her only for such period of her widowhood as she has been, or shall be, charged with the maintenance of such child or children; for any period during which she has not been, or she shall not be, so charged, it shall be granted and paid to the guardian of such child or children: Provided further, That a widow or guardian to whom increase of pension has been, or shall hereafter be, granted on account of minor children shall not be deprived thereof by reason of their being maintained in whole or in part at the expense of a State or the public in any educational institution, or in any institution organized for the care of soldiers' orphans: Provided further, That the rate of pension for the widow of any person who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the War of 1812, or for 60 days or more in the war with Mexico, on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto during the war with that nation, and was honorably discharged therefrom, shall be $50 a month.

SEC. 3. That the rate of pension for the former widow of any officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States for 90 days or more during the Civil War and was honorably discharged from such service, or who, having so served for less than 90 days, was discharged for a disability incurred in the service and in line of duty, or who died in the service of a disability incurred in the service and in line of duty, such widow having married the officer or enlisted man prior to June 27, 1915, or if after such date shall have lived and cohabited with such soldier, sailor, or marine for a period of at least two years and continuing until his death, and having remarried, either once or more than once after the death of the soldier, sailor, or marine, if it be shown that such subsequent or successive marriage or marriages has or have been dissolved, either by the death of the husband or husbands, or by divorce for any cause other than infidelity on the part of the wife, shall be entitled to and be paid a pension at the rate of $50 a month: Provided, That in case of any widow whose name has been dropped from the pension roll because of her remarriage, if the pension has been granted to an insane, idiotic, or otherwise helpless child, or to a child or children under the age of 16 years, she shall not be entitled to renewal of pension under this act until the pension to such child or children terminates, unless such child or children be a member or members of her family and cared for by her, and upon the renewal of pension to such widow, payment of pension to such child or children shall cease.

SEC. 4. That the benefits of this act shall be extended to and shall comprehend and include each and severally the classes of persons enumerated in the first, second, third, fourth, and fifth paragraphs of section 4693, Revised Statutes of the United States, who served during the Civil War, and also any person who is now or may hereafter become entitled to pension under the acts of June 27, 1890, February 15, 1895, and the joint resolutions of July 1, 1902, and June 28, 1906, or the acts of January 29, 1887, March 3, 1891, and February 17, 1897, on account of service during the Civil War and the war with Mexico, and the widows and minor children of such persons: Provided, That service under this section shall be proven in the manner and form specified in section 2, act of March 4, 1917, and the act of September 1, 1922.

SEC. 5. That all Army nurses of the Civil War who have been, or who may hereafter be, allowed a pension under existing laws shall be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $50 a month.

SEC. 6. That all persons now on the pension roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot or have been totally disabled in the same, or where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the bones of the forearm or any part of the bones of the leg below the tuberosity of the tibia, shall receive a pension at the rate of $80 a month; that all persons who in like manner shall have lost an arm at or at any point above the elbow or a leg at or at any point above the knee, or have been totally disabled in the same, or where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the humerus or femur or of the shoulder or hip joint, or where there is an ankylosis of either the elbow or knee or shoulder or hip joint, shall receive a pension at the rate of $85 a month; that all persons who in like manner shall have lost one hand and one foot, or shall have lost one hand or one foot and in addition thereto shall have lost a portion of the other hand or foot, or shall have been totally disabled in the same, or where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the bones or joints of both of said arms or legs, shall receive a pension at the rate of $100 a month; and that all persons who in like manner shall have lost both arms or both legs or have been totally disabled in the same, or where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the bones or of the joints of both of said arms or legs, shall receive a pension at the rate of $125 a month; and it is hereby directed that the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be reviewed without application on the part of the pensioner all cases wherein there is an excision or resection of any part of the bones of an arm or leg, shoulder or hip, or any of the joints, or an ankylosis of any of said joints, and shall place the name of the pensioner on the roll at the rates herein provided.

SEC. 7. That in the adjudication of claims for widows' pensions marriage of the parties and the legality thereof may be established by any competent testimony, and in the absence of direct proof of a ceremonial marriage, satisfactory evidence that the parties lived together as husband and wife and were so recognized by their neighbors and acquaintances until the death of the husband may be held to constitute sufficient proof of marriage; and cohabitation continuously for seven years or more may be accepted in lieu of proof that no impediment existed to the marriage of the parties. A widow, otherwise entitled to pension under this act, may not be barred from being granted such pension for the reason that she failed to live and cohabit with the "soldier, sailor, officer, marine, marine officer, or other person continuously from the date of the marriage to the date of his death," unless it be shown that she willfully deserted such "soldier, sailor, officer, marine, marine officer, or other person," without good cause; and all provisions of law requiring such continuous cohabitation in any case are hereby repealed, except as provided in section 2 of this act.

SEC. 8. That the pension or increase of pension herein provided for, as to all persons whose names are now on the pension roll, or who are now in receipt of a pension under existing law, shall commence at the rates herein provided on the fourth day of the next month after the approval of this act; and as to persons whose names are not now on the pension roll, or who are not now in receipt of a pension under existing law, but who may be entitled to a pension under the provisions of this act, such pensions shall commence from the date of filing application therefor in the Bureau of Pensions in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; and the mailing of a check in payment of a pension to the address of a pensioner shall constitute payment in the event of the death of the pensioner on or after the date of the check, and shall be payable to his estate.

SEC. 9. That nothing in this act contained shall be held to affect or diminish the additional pension to those on the roll designated as "The Army and Navy medal of honor roll," as provided in the act of April 27, 1916, but any increase herein provided for shall be in addition thereto; and no pension heretofore granted under any act, public or private, shall be reduced by anything contained in this act.

SEC. 10. That no claim agent or attorney or other person shall be recognized in the adjudication of claims under this act, except in claims for original pension, and in such cases no more than the sum of $10 shall be allowed for services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any such claim, which sum shall be payable only on the order of the Commissioner of Pensions; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or shall wrongfully withhold from the pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of a pension allowed or due to such pensioner or claimant under this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every offense, be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 11. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with or inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FESS). Is a second demanded? If not, the question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill as read.

The question was taken, and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CAREY SEGREGATION NO. 11, COLORADO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3195) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept completion of Carey segregation No. 11, and to issue patent therefor.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, this bill is very simple on the face of it, but it may in many ways change the policy of the Government as expressed in former irrigation legislation. I think it would be well for the sponsor of the bill to make a complete explanation of the effect of it, and what it is intended to do.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, this Carey irrigation project is a case where a number of farmers have gotten together and combined to irrigate a tract of land, and thereby to obtain title under the Carey Act. In these cases sometimes it costs a little and sometimes it costs more. In this case about 225 families have spent about $20 an acre already in this development. They have developed enough water to make about 1 acre-foot of water. It requires really about an acre-foot and a half of water to irrigate the property. They have spent more money than it ordinarily takes to reclaim a piece of land. They have gone their limit and spent $20 an acre, or a total of about $400,000 on this project. Enough water has been developed to irrigate about half of it, or about half enough water to irrigate all of it. Under the Carey Irrigation Act the State has the administering of it. The Governor of Colorado and the State land board have asked that the Department of the Interior grant a patent to the State of Colorado so that it can deal with these farmers as a whole instead of individually.

In this way the people will put a bond issue on the land and will spend about $400,000 more in developing more water. This land is out in the foothills and of no value to anybody anywhere without the water on it. They have dammed up some dry streams and have made reservoirs where water runs only during the flood season. In this way they conserve the water and use it in the irrigation season to cultivate the ground. As I say, about 225 families have put in about $20 an acre, and they are developing a project which when completed will house and feed and support a great number of people.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Under the law before the Federal authorities can patent to the State under the Carey Act they must be satisfied that enough water has been developed to fully reclaim the land. In this case it has been impossible to present proof of full and complete irrigation satisfactory to the Federal authorities, but there is as complete irrigation as can be had, unless these people shall have such title to their land or the State shall have such title to their land as will enable them to secure funds for the further development of their enterprise. That is the situation as I understand it.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. All that this bill does is to authorize the Federal Government to issue the patent under conditions which do not quite meet the requirements of the Carey Act as to full and complete irrigation. It is also true that as a matter of fact these settlers could have acquired this land under the homestead act without any payment whatever or without any requirement of irrigation; but they went upon the land because they desired to have it irrigated, and they desired to utilize the provisions of the Carey Act for that purpose. That is still their purpose and their desire. Unless what is proposed is done, it will leave these people with an insufficient water supply, no possibility of securing more, and in danger of losing all they have expended.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. And it will tie up the Carey project forever.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. The Carey project could not be fully worked out, because of the fact that the Federal authorities can not issue the patent to the State, there not being full and complete water rights assured.

Mr. SNELL. Has the Federal Government any claim against this land except its original ownership of public land, which is of no value without irrigation?

Mr. MONDELL. No; the Carey Act is an act under which the State applies to the Federal Government to have a certain area of land set aside for settlement and development under irrigation, and under the Carey Act the Federal Government issues a patent, not to the settler but to the State, in order that the State may also enforce its requirement with regard to settlement and development. The Federal authorities in this case are not justified in issuing a patent to the State, because while good faith has been shown and great effort has been made and much land has been irrigated, there has not been enough water conserved to fully and completely irrigate the land during the entire irrigation season. Nothing would be gained by refusing to issue a patent. These people would be there without any title to their land and the Government would not be benefited in any way.

Mr. SNELL. Do these people live on the land at the present time?

Mr. MONDELL. The major portion of them do.

Mr. SNELL. How many acres are there in this project?

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. About 24,000 acres.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand, there are 225 families.

Mr. MONDELL. There are 225 families, not all of whom are living on the land at this time because, I assume, under the State law the settlers are not required actually to go upon the land until the water has been supplied for the irrigation of the land. Of course, under the State law they must go upon their land and they must reside upon it before they can obtain patents from the State. But by granting this patent to the State, the State authorities or the settlers will be in a position to secure the additional funds that are necessary to enable them to build additional reservoirs.

Mr. SNELL. Is there anything in this legislation that will afford a precedent under which other irrigation projects can ask for special legislation?

Mr. MONDELL. We have had special legislation for several irrigation projects under the Carey Act. For instance, in my State a certain Carey Act project was in much the same situation that this project is in. The farmers went on in good faith, spent a good deal of money, and it turned out that there was not a sufficient amount of water for the complete and satisfactory irrigation of all the land. In that case the settlers were willing to go on with the irrigation of the land, delivering the water they already had.

Mr. SNELL. Then this is not the first time that this has been done?

Mr. MONDELL. No; it is occasionally necessary to legislate where it is impossible under the circumstances to supply all the water that under the law must be supplied in order to justify the Federal Government in issuing patents.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The money so far expended has been supplied by the present owners?

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Absolutely.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And the remaining part of the money to develop the land will be secured by the issuance of bonds or securities to raise the money?

Mr. MONDELL. As the settlers or State may determine to do, but the settlers must furnish the money.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The Federal Government does not furnish any money under this legislation?

Mr. MONDELL. No.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of an objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if I understand the matter, application was made to the Government under the Carey Act to set apart this 24,000 acres with the understanding that patents would issue whenever there was sufficient water to reclaim the land under the irrigation project.

Mr. VAILE. The patents were to issue when the land is fully irrigated and reclaimed and occupied.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I left out the occupancy.

Mr. VAILE. They have expended half a million dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. The consideration the Government received for setting apart the 24,000 acres of land was that there should be sufficient water furnished to fully reclaim the land and put it in a condition for occupancy as regular farming land.

Mr. VAILE. The inducement which led the Government to that policy was to get actual settlers on the land and develop farms.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but how many settlers are there on this 24,000 acres?

Mr. VAILE. About 200 families. Others are ready to come in when they get additional water.

Mr. BLANTON. Two hundred families on 24,000 acres.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. This will enable more families to come in and settle on the land.

Mr. BLANTON. When the Government parts with its title to the land by the issuance of a patent it does not know whether or not the purpose for which the Carey Act provided for segregation is going to be carried out.

Mr. VAILE. It has to rely on the State for that. In the arid-land States the State has the machinery for seeing that the settler does go on the land.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. And in good faith develop the land. That was the purpose of the Carey Act.

Mr. BLANTON. The settlers do not have to go on the land until the water is provided.

Mr. VAILE. Under the State law, no, because there is no way to irrigate this arid land.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman think it a good policy on the part of the Government to part with the title of 24,000 acres until all these requirements are made?

Mr. VAILE. Well, the alternative would be that you would not get the additional farmers. The State is the trustee for the Government, and will see that the provisions are fully carried out.

Mr. BLANTON. Why can not the State do that before the patent is issued?

Mr. VAILE. How can it be done by one who has no title? The title is the prerequisite to raising the money. You must have the title in order to give security.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. The State board of land commissioners, when the Interior Department gives the patent, will deal with the settlers and make them come in and consent to the bond issue and build a new dam costing $232,000 and about $90,000 for a new canal. The State of Colorado, the State land board, will administer that and see that nobody gets the grant until they put up the money.

Mr. BLANTON. This is not a case where the irrigation fund has been furnished by the Government?

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Oh, no.

Mr. CRAMTON. The real purpose of this is to put the land in condition so that further money can be borrowed upon it. Can the gentleman state whether there is an assurance that there will be such a further loan as will permit the people who have put in already $400,000 to complete the project. Or, on the other hand, is it simply putting the title out of the Federal Government into the hands of the State of Colorado, so that there may be some squeezing-out process and this land, with $400,000 improvement, will go into other hands?

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Oh, no.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would be glad to have the gentleman make a statement as to what will happen.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. The people of this whole community are in favor of the project, because it means a great deal to get a bunch of ground in the hands of irrigation farmers instead of dry-land farmers. This land could all have been homesteaded; people could have lived on it a few days a week for seven months of two years and obtain title to it.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Carey Act was to take care of certain conditions and laid down certain conditions that have to be met, and you are asking to have those set aside. I am now asking one definite question, but not as to these other matters the gentleman speaks of. Is there a definite funding proposition in view by the people who have already put in the $400,000, or is this a bill that is going to let some other people get hold of the land?

Mr. VAILE. The gentleman's mind can rest at ease in respect to that. The State has a considerable sum of money in its school fund, part of which could be loaned on the land. It is not for the purpose of squeezing anybody out who is already in, not at all.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman is sure that with this authority the people who have gone thus far will be able to get a further loan?

Mr. VAILE. Absolutely.

Mr. CRAMTON. And complete their project?

Mr. VAILE. That is the purpose of this legislation.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would say to the gentleman that personally I feel reluctant about seeing the provisions of the Carey Act set aside. This case seems to be a desirable case. I hope it will not be taken as a precedent so that at any time in the future gentlemen in the West who desire it may think they can come here and have the patent given regardless of whether the provisions of the Carey Act have been complied with or not.

Mr. VAILE. We hope there will not be many cases, but here is a case where nearly half a million dollars has just been already expended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to accept work already performed and the proof submitted under Carey segregation No. 11, State of Colorado, and to issue patent to the State of Colorado for lands embraced therein.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. VAILE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BOARD OF ACCOUNTANCY—DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2531) to create a board of accountancy for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object. The District has already a day given to it, and I think this should be taken up on that day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

SALE OF MARINE HOSPITAL RESERVATION, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11040) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the sale of the marine hospital reservation in Cleveland, Ohio," approved July 26, 1916.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object, unless the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON] desires to be heard on the bill.

Mr. NORTON. I would like to be heard.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I reserve the right to object.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, a bill was passed several years ago authorizing the sale of the marine hospital in Cleveland, but at that time the bill provided that only $400,000 of the amount obtained could be used for the construction of a new hospital. The Government, and especially the Surgeon General and the people who have to do with hospitals in this city, are very anxious to use the entire amount of money received from the sale of this hospital for the construction of a new hospital. That is the entire purpose of the bill. It is to remove the objection upon the part of the Government. While this hospital is being used, all of the Government officials say that it is not fit for use. Some six or eight different railroad tracks cross it—I think eight. Smoke is coming into it at all times. The property cost originally only $12,000. We are not asking for the appropriation of a single cent.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. At the time this bill was passed several years ago authorizing the sale of the hospital buildings, were not conditions such that it would cost much more then to construct a hospital than it would now?

Mr. NORTON. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that. It would cost a good deal more now than it would then—probably double the amount.

Mr. BLANTON. I thought that was only about three years ago.

Mr. NORTON. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. BLANTON. But the original act did provide that only $400,000 of the proceeds could be used.

Mr. NORTON. Four hundred thousand dollars should be, yes; and the balance go into the Treasury.

Mr. BLANTON. If that money is turned back into the Treasury it becomes money that is available for all uses.

Mr. NORTON. That is true.

Mr. BLANTON. That is money that can be used for every purpose, and if we now provide that it can be expended for this hospital, in a sense it is appropriating money out of the Treasury.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman think that land can be bought and a hospital erected in Cleveland for $400,000? Why, they are building a private bank now in that city that costs $12,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there a Government hospital there already?

Mr. NORTON. This is the only one there.

Mr. BLANTON. And what is the closest one to Cleveland other than this?

Mr. NORTON. There is not a Government hospital near there. Everybody on the Lakes, every interest, has petitioned for this. The Government itself insists that it is absolutely required. This bill was introduced at the suggestion of the Surgeon General. He was the one who asked me to bring the matter up. It is for Government purposes. It is impossible to build a hospital in that section for $400,000.

Mr. BLANTON. How much is involved; that is, how much over $400,000 will they receive?

Mr. NORTON. I have no idea what they will receive. The property is to be sold by the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. Surely the gentleman has an idea of what is in contemplation.

Mr. NORTON. I think the property ought to sell for a million dollars or more. I hope it will.

Mr. BLANTON. This bill, then, would authorize the expenditure of two and a half times as much as was contemplated at first.

Mr. NORTON. When the bill was first talked of; but land can not be secured for any such money, and it is impossible to build a local hospital for that much money.

Mr. BLANTON. Will this hospital be used by the disabled veterans of the late war?

Mr. NORTON. That is what it is used for now.

Mr. BLANTON. And it will be used for them?

Mr. NORTON. Yes; as well as for other purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of the act entitled "An act authorizing the sale of the marine hospital reservation in Cleveland, Ohio, approved July 26, 1916, be amended by striking out after the word "therefor" the words "within a limit of cost of $400,000, and the balance of the proceeds of the sale shall be paid into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts" and insert in lieu thereof the following words, "and the Secretary of the Treasury shall with the proceeds procure, by purchase, a site in or convenient to said city of Cleveland, Ohio, and erect thereon a suitable building for use as a United States marine hospital and other Government hospital purposes, the same to be in accordance with the designs to be prepared by the Supervising Architect to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That the cost of the site and construction of the new building shall not exceed the sum realized from the sale of the present building and site.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 9, after the word "site," insert: "Provided further, That after the sale of the present property it shall remain in the custody and control of the United States until after the completion of the proposed new hospital plant."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. NORTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE CROSS OR MEDAL.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2192) authorizing the award of the distinguished service cross or distinguished service medal provided for in the act of July 9, 1918, to Army officers brevetted for gallantry during the war with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or China relief expedition.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not press the objection, for I feel there is merit in the bill—I desire to ask why it is that this action has been deferred so long if it is important, as I assume it to be. The last time this went to the Senate, according to the report, was in 1902. Now 20 years have gone by and this measure is now brought before the House. Why has it been waiting 20 years?

Mr. SNELL. There does not seem to be anybody here who understands the provisions of the bill, and it seems to me it had better go over without prejudice.

Mr. HICKS. Is there any member of the Committee on Military Affairs here who can answer any question in regard to this bill? The question I just propounded I will now again propound, as I see the chairman of the committee has just come in. According to the report, the matter was taken up in the Senate in 1902, and yet 20 years have gone by, and I am wondering why it is taken up now.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. I will.

Mr. SEARS. I would like to suggest that many have died in 20 years. I know I have been trying to get medals for those brave——

Mr. HICKS. Senators or soldiers have died?

Mr. SEARS. Generals and private soldiers, too.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, this bill was considered by the committee at the time I had gone away for a rest under the advice of my doctors, so that I am not familiar with the situation regarding the matter. I would ask unanimous consent that the bill be allowed to go over without prejudice until the next Unanimous Consent Calendar day, when it can come up for consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

REGULATING SALE OF MILK, ETC., DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7746) to regulate within the District of Columbia the sale of milk, cream, and certain milk products, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I expect to—this seems to me very important legislation; and there is to be a District day soon, and it seems to me these regulatory matters should come up in the normal way and have full and free discussion on the floor of the House and not be passed under unanimous consent on such an important matter as this. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

TEACHERS' SALARIES AND SCHOOL REORGANIZATION, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10300) to amend the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a bill which I expect to support when the proper time comes, but I do not believe it should be taken up at this time, and as there are no members of the committee here——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNELL. I will yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand that there are a number of vacancies now of teachers in the District of Columbia and that these vacancies have existed for two years and it is impossible to get enough teachers for the District of Columbia, and I quite agree with the gentleman that this is a bill that is very important——

Mr. SNELL. Too important legislation to be considered in this manner.

Mr. BLANTON. It should not be passed until it can be taken up in an orderly way and carefully considered—say, to-day, after we get through with the calendar, and we will be through in about 30 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. I do not believe it should be taken up to-day. We certainly should have the chairman explain the provisions of the bill. I expect to support it, but I believe it should be considered in an orderly way and the provisions fully explained to the House.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, this bill is seriously defective and ought to be amended in many particulars. It does not take care of those who ought to be taken care of and takes care of some who ought not to be taken care of. This bill ought to come up in such a way as to give it proper consideration. I intend to support the bill if properly amended, but I think it is objectionable in its present form.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent that the milk bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PREVENTION OF VENEREAL DISEASES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11021) for the prevention of venereal diseases in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice and go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SILVER SERVICE OF THE CRUISER "BROOKLYN."

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12648) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Brooklyn Museum the silver service which was presented to the cruiser Brooklyn by citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. KLINE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3990), and that the Senate bill be considered in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3990), and that that bill be considered in the House in lieu of the House bill of similar import. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Is the Senate bill identical with the House bill?

Mr. KLINE of New York. They are both the same.

Mr. HICKS. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House has unanimously indorsed this proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3990) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Brooklyn Museum the silver service which was presented to the cruiser Brooklyn by citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Brooklyn Museum, of Brooklyn, N. Y., for preservation and exhibition in such museum, the silver service which was presented to the cruiser Brooklyn by citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y.: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for the delivery of such silver service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KLINE of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the House bill, similar to the Senate bill, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

COLLECTION OF STATISTICS OF FOREIGN COMMERCE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3295) to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. May we have that bill reported, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the control and with it the expense of operation of the office known as the Bureau of Customs Statistics under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Treasury, now located in the customhouse, city of New York, State of New York, including all officers, clerks, and other employees of that bureau, official records, papers, mechanical and office equipment, furniture, and supplies now in use, be, and the same hereby is, transferred from the Department of the Treasury to the Department of Commerce. The Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized, if by him deemed advisable, to consolidate the said Bureau of Customs Statistics with the Division of Statistics of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce into one office, located in either Washington or New York, or partly in either place, in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce; that the statistical bureau hereby authorized to be located in New York under the jurisdiction and control of the Department of Commerce continue to occupy the premises in the New York customhouse which are now occupied by the Bureau of Customs Statistics, and that additional space as needed be assigned in the same building for its use by the Secretary of the Treasury upon request of the Secretary of Commerce. Seventy-five per cent of the unexpended appropriations or allotments from appropriations available for the maintenance and expense of operation of the said Bureau of Customs Statistics are, from the time when this act takes effect, deducted from the appropriation of the Department of the Treasury for collecting revenue from customs and transferred to the appropriation for the Department of Commerce, to be available from the time of such transfer, for expenditure in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, for personal services, rental or purchase of mechanical tabulating, duplicating, and other office machinery, devices, furniture, and supplies, including their exchange or repair; subsistence, traveling, and transportation expenses of employees for official purposes; telegraph, telephone, and all other contingent expenses not specifically included in the foregoing.

SEC. 2. That the Department of Commerce will furnish monthly to the collectors at the several ports a tabulation in detail showing the quantities and values of the merchandise imported and exported from their respective districts, and will furnish the Treasury Department upon request such special reports as may be necessary from time to time.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect and be in force on the 1st day of July, 1922.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. BLANTON. I will withhold my objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let us have the amendments to the bill reported.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think if the gentleman fully understood about the bill he would not interpose any objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I thought the bill was such that it should be considered at another time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No. The bill shows that there is in the Treasury Department a bureau known as the Bureau of Customs Statistics. This bureau consists of a group of men who work in New York and gather these customs statistics together and collate them and pass them over to the Department of Commerce, and the Department of Commerce gets out these monthly reports, with which the gentleman is familiar, giving the statistics of our imports and exports.

Now, the present system involves not only a certain amount of duplication of work, but it also delays the work so that at the present time we are getting the reports of customhouse exports and imports but slowly. The September report is the last report we have received. This will do away with the duplication and enable the work to be done more expeditiously, and on the whole I think it will save money.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman investigated whether or not it will avoid duplication?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It necessarily will avoid duplication, because it puts it all under one department instead of first being collected by one department and then passed over to another.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Is not the customs branch of the Treasury Department a better bureau to gather these statistics than some outside department? Should it not be left in the hands of the customs officials?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No. The same force now doing the work in the customs department will be located at the same place and do the same work, and when they complete it it will be finished in the form that the Department of Commerce wants it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I have not read this bill, and have only heard it read from the desk; but as I understood it, it establishes certain offices and authorizes certain traveling expenses.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no. There will be no new employees whatever. This bill meets with the unanimous approval of both Democrats and Republicans of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BLANTON. But this report is printed weekly, is it not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is furnished by the Department of Commerce afterwards. The main report is the large volume which comes to you each month, containing the reports of the exports and imports.

Mr. BLANTON. Is that still to be printed at the Government Printing Office, or will it be printed in New York?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It always has been printed at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. BLANTON. But when this bill passes where will it be printed?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Here in the Government Printing Office.

Mr. BLANTON. Then they will have to send all the data down from New York to Washington?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The work is to be done promptly and sent to the Department of Commerce.

Mr. HAWLEY. At present the reports are sent from the New York office to the Treasury Department here, and then sent to the Department of Commerce, and the accounts are compiled and the material printed. There is delay in sending this material first to the Treasury Department and then to the Department of Commerce, and the business interests of the country are complaining that the information does not reach them as promptly as it should.

This will eliminate that delay and will furnish more immediately the information for which this money is expended to those who may find it useful.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes, I will yield.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Is it not true that this tabulation, prepared by the Department of Commerce, proceeds upon the finality of the liquidation by the Treasury officials, and that this record that is made up and handed over to the Department of Commerce will be handled by the same people, and that it will expedite it to have the management of the statistical work absolutely under the control of one department?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is correct. That is the purpose of it, simply to expedite the work.

Mr. HAWLEY. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I understood the gentleman to say a while ago that the work is all being done by the Department of Commerce now; that is, the real work in connection with the tabulation.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The final work is all done by the Department of Commerce. They get their reports from these parties who are working in New York and send them into the Treasury, and after the information gets to the Treasury it is turned over to the Department of Commerce and they make up the final tabulation.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I can not see where you will expedite matters by simply shifting responsibility, then.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The department officials, both of the Treasury and of the Department of Commerce, agree that it will expedite the work, that time will be saved, and both departments are in favor of it. The point of it seems to be that if the Department of Commerce has charge of it right from the start they will get it out at first in the form in which they want it, and will not have to retabulate it and go over it again. There will be a saving of time and also a saving of expense, and it is claimed by the Treasury that unless this is done they will require a larger appropriation for the work.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will an amendment to section 1 be first in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The committee amendment to section 1 is first in order. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 14, strike out "75 per centum" and insert in lieu thereof the word "all."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I will say that this is made necessary by reason of the fact that the passage of the bill has been delayed so long. Originally it was expected that the bill would go into force on the 1st day of July, 1922, as provided in the last section, but now it is not to go into force until the 1st day of January, 1923, and what little there will be left of this appropriation ought all to be turned over.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If you are going to cut down expenses, what is the use of expending all of the unexpended balance? It seems to me that if this is going to be an economy measure, you ought to be able to reduce the appropriation in some way.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The reason I say it will cut down expenses is that unless this bill is enacted they will have to make a larger appropriation than is now being made.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Then there will be another deficiency bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is hoped that by the passage of this bill we will save the necessity of anything of that kind.

Mr. JONES of Texas. On the face of the bill, then, there is no assurance of economy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 2, line 21, after the word "available" insert the words "for the current fiscal year."

Mr. CRAMTON. I think that is the intention anyway.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 13, strike out the words and figures "July, 1922" and insert in lieu thereof "January, 1923."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GREEN of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LAND TO FULTON COUNTY, GA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12174) to authorize the Attorney General to convey certain land of the United States to Fulton County, Ga., to widen McDonough Road in front of the United States penitentiary.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield to me about 10 minutes?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, to-day's Washington Post contains a dispatch which I would like to have the Clerk read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it will be read in the gentleman's time.

Mr. LONDON. Reserving the right to object, to what does it relate?

Mr. KAHN. It relates to the coming to Washington of M. Clemenceau.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PITTSBURGH, PA., December 3 (en route with Clemenceau to Baltimore—By the Associated Press).—Georges Clemenceau sought to-day to clarify his position on the League of Nations as he sped east to Baltimore from St. Louis, where yesterday he delivered the fifth of his addresses in an effort to arouse sentiment for the return of the United States to participation in European affairs.

Concerned, because some newspapers he saw interpret his St. Louis speech as a plea to America to enter the League of Nations, he declared he had not intended to advocate such a step.

It was well known, at least in France, he told correspondents, that he was not an advocate of the league, and he said he would not urge the United States to enter it.

However, he declared, the league has done some good, as he said in his St. Louis address, and he would much prefer to see the United States enter it than not to come into European affairs at all. He indicated that what he really would prefer above all else, however, was an agreement of the United States and Great Britain to guarantee France against aggression.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the last part of this article is particularly interesting to the people of this country. When I was in Europe in 1919 M. Tardieu and other leaders of the French people were especially desirous of having the United States go into a special agreement with France so that if Germany should begin any attack on France the United States and England, through their agreement with France, would immediately come to the rescue of that country. I told those gentlemen that in my opinion the United States would never enter into such an agreement; that it had not entered into an agreement for offensive and defensive alliance with any foreign country since the adoption of our Constitution in 1789. Then these gentlemen began to explain how France had 38,000,000 people, while Germany, according to their figures, had 68,000,000 people. In case England and the United States both withdrew, France would be peculiarly open to attack on the part of Germany.

I told them very frankly that the French people were placing themselves in this peculiar situation. According to them the population of France at that time was only 38,000,000 people, while the population of Germany was 68,000,000 people. I called to their attention the fact that in 1870, when the war between France and Germany was fought, each country had about 40,000,000 people. I called to their attention that while traveling through France we saw very few children. On the other hand, while traveling through the occupied territory of Germany we had to caution our chauffeur repeatedly to refrain from running over the large numbers of German children which crowded the thoroughfares on every hand. Now Germany is away ahead of France on account of the increase of population. I said to them that the women of America will have a great deal to say regarding this matter. They are now voters in the United States. They have a voice in the Government, and if you intend to get an agreement of that kind enacted the woman will naturally say, "Why should I send my boy to defend the boundaries of France when the French mother does not raise any boys to defend that boundary?" I said under these circumstances you will have a very big question in the United States to determine. That, Mr. Speaker, is the situation. The American mothers raise their children and are willing to allow them to go to the defense of their country in case their country gets into trouble. But as for forming an alliance with France to send our boys to protect the boundaries of France because she gets into trouble with Germany or any other country, I doubt whether the American mothers will be willing to agree to any proposition of that kind.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. The gentleman says that he told the French leaders in 1919 that America would never go into any agreement with any nation——

Mr. KAHN. No; I said we had never gone into one since the adoption of the Constitution, and personally I did not think they would go into any such agreement.

Mr. SEARS. But since then we have gone into the four-power pact and have advocated the association of nations.

Mr. KAHN. We have not gone into a four-power pact in such a way that we would immediately be called upon to send our troops to the defense of any other nation.

Mr. SEARS. What about the association of nations if we had gone into that?

Mr. KAHN. I never was for going into the association of nations, and therefore it is a question I have never seriously thought about.

Mr. SEARS. I want to congratulate my friend on his frankness.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of an objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to convey, by quitclaim, to the county of Fulton, in the State of Georgia, for use as a public road, and for no other purpose, all the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to all that strip of land, 5 feet in width, off the northerly and northeasterly sides, along the McDonough Road frontage of United States penitentiary farm No. 1, in said county, between the easterly line of Sawtell Avenue and the westerly line of Forrest Road: Provided, however, That the county of Fulton shall not have the right to sell or convey the said premises, nor to use the same for any other purpose whatever than as herein provided; and in the event the premises shall cease to be used for a public road and cease to be cared for and maintained as are other public roads in said county, the right, title, and interest hereby authorized to be conveyed shall therefore immediately revert to the United States: Provided further, That the conveyance herein authorized shall not take effect until and unless a strip of land 5 feet wide is dedicated by the property owners on the opposite side of McDonough Road: Provided further, That the county of Fulton shall bear the cost of replacing the existing curb in front of the residence of the warden along said McDonough Road as widened.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, strike out the word "therefore" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thereupon."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I do that, Mr. Speaker, to correct what seems to be an obvious error.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 11, after the word "not," strike out the words "take effect" and insert in lieu thereof the words "be made."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the reason I offer that is that this is to authorize the conveyance of a strip of land, 50 feet wide, for the purpose of widening a street. The way the bill is drawn the Government gives it and immediately makes the conveyance, and if they fail to convey the other 5 feet the conveyance is void. By making the change the Attorney General will not make the conveyance until the other side performs their duty.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SANDERS of Indiana a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ATTORNEY GENERAL—IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Resolution 461, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 461.

Resolved, That in the consideration of House Resolution 425 the Committee on the Judiciary be authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths to witnesses, and to sit during sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, to what does it refer?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This resolution has the unanimous indorsement of the entire committee, Republicans and Democrats alike.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it for general purposes or for a specific case?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is for the investigation under Resolution 425, which the gentleman perhaps will remember, relating to the impeachment charges against the Attorney General made on the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MAHLON PITNEY.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4025) to permit Mahlon Pitney, an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, to retire, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the Judicial Code, section 260, as amended by the act of February 25, 1919, chapter 29, section 6, be, and they are hereby, extended and made applicable to Mahlon Pitney, an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, in consequence of his physical disability, notwithstanding he has not attained the age of 70 years as required by the aforesaid provisions: Provided, however, That the said Mahlon Pitney shall resign the said office of Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States within two months after the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Texas 20 minutes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, under existing law a Justice of the Supreme Court who has served 10 years and has reached the age of 70 years may retire, or under another law he may resign, retaining his pay during the remainder of his life. Mr. Pitney, according to the statements that have been made to us, has reached a condition where he can not in the future be of any service to the country because of his physical condition. A number of certificates from very prominent doctors are on file in the Senate Judiciary Committee and we have copies of them in the House Judiciary Committee. They were inserted in the RECORD in the Senate. There is no doubt but that he is entirely incapacitated, without any hope of permanent recovery, and in view of the fact that so much work is pending in the Supreme Court and that only seven active members are now upon that bench it is important that something be done so that the President may be able to fill his place as soon as possible.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. How long is it since Mr. Pitney served on the Supreme Court bench?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not think he has been away from his duties for more than just a few months.

Mr. BLANTON. It has been only since the summer vacation, has it not?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. That he has been under disability?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And his age is what?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. His age is not quite 70. It lacks a few months of that age, perhaps six or seven months. However, he has served for more than 10 years.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there any reason to believe that he will not be any better than he is now?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is no chance of his recovery, according to the statements of the doctors.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, may I say in answer to the question of the gentleman from Texas that it is perfectly apparent from the letters written by several experts, recently inserted in the RECORD in the Senate, that there is no possibility that Justice Pitney will ever be in a condition, either physically or mentally, to properly discharge the duties of the office that he now holds.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is perfectly evident.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. He has served over 10 years?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I merely want to voice a protest against the future extension of such a precedent. It is a rare privilege and next to our highest honor to be a member of the Supreme Court of the United States. The position carries with it many privileges besides the salary. Only a few officers enjoy the privilege under the law to be able, when reaching the age of 70, after 10 years of service, to retire on the salary of an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court for life. Until recent months the Members of the House who have attended the sessions of the Supreme Court have seen Mr. Justice Pitney upon the bench, and they have heard him deliver opinions. Only during a few months has he been under this disability, and I think we might well wait the four years more for him to reach the retiring age and in that way prevent the further extension of this precedent. The time may come when it may be followed very frequently.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, we have already established the precedent in the instance of Mr. Justice Moody, who had not served as long as has Justice Pitney.

Mr. BLANTON. And he was how old?

Mr. MONTAGUE. He had not reached the age of retirement.

Mr. BLANTON. The same argument that I was making applies.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not entering the argument, but endeavoring to show that this is not a precedent.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, Mr. Moody had been a Member of this House for a long time. Members were very familiar with his work in the House. He became very helpless while he was on the bench. Therefore, retirement was given him accordingly.

Mr. BLANTON. The statement by the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] merely emphasizes the argument that I am making, because it shows how easy, after we once establish a precedent, it is to follow it.

There could be instances where this would be repeated over and over again, and while I do not think it will affect action on the bill, yet I want to voice my protest against extending the precedent, and for one I expect to vote against this bill.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I want to correct a statement I made. I learn that Mr. Justice Pitney is only about 66 years old. The party who gave me the statement as to his age said, as I understood him, that the judge only lacked a few months of being 70 years old. I find that is incorrect; but that should not prevent relief, as there is no question that he is permanently disabled and that the Supreme Court needs relief.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. And yet there are various instances of men all over the country who are over 65 years of age who are conducting very large business affairs?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And because he is 66 years of age and suffering from present disability he may be better.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Has Justice Pitney served 10 years—the required time?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; he has served 10 years.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House again divided, and there were—ayes 79, noes 1.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent—

On request of Mr. ELLIOTT, Mr. DUNBAR was granted leave of absence indefinitely on account of serious illness.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas was granted leave of absence indefinitely on account of illness.

Mr. LONDON was granted leave of absence for one day on account of important business.

Mr. MCFADDEN was granted leave of absence for six days on account of important business.

Mr. PARK of Georgia was granted leave of absence indefinitely on account of important business and sickness in his family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent—

Mr. STEENERSON was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Winnie L. Martin, Sixty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon (H. R. 9452, omnibus H. R. 10025).

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 5, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

714. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of French Broad River, N. C.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

715. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination and survey of Raritan River, N. J.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

716. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from The Adjutant General of the Army submitting report of documents received and distributed during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922; to the Committee on Printing.

717. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting recommendation for the passage of legislation to increase the pay of headquarters messengers in the Philippine Islands from the appropriation for "Pay of the Army, 1923," increased pay for foreign service authorized by the Army appropriation act of April 27, 1914, not to exceed the sum of $800; to the Committees on Appropriations and Military Affairs.

718. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting recommendation for the passage of legislation which will provide that during the fiscal year 1923 the cost of subsistence allowances for enlisted men of the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard shall be chargeable to the appropriation for "Subsistence of the Army," notwithstanding the provisions of section 67 of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the acts of June 4, 1920, and September 22, 1922; to the Committees on Appropriations and Military Affairs.

719. A letter from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting report for the period July 1, 1921, to June 30, 1922, inclusive, giving names of statutory and contingent fund employees of the House and their respective compensation, including clerks to Members; the expenditures from the contingent fund and from certain specific appropriations; the amounts drawn from the Treasury; the stationery accounts; and unexpended balances for the year ended June 30, 1922 (H. Doc. No. 474); to the Committee on Accounts and ordered to be printed.

748. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting separate report of purchases made during the fiscal year 1922 for account of the 5 per cent bond purchase fund up to July 2, 1922 (H. Doc. No. 477); to the Committee on Ways and Means.

749. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting statements of expenditures under said acts to November 30, 1922, in the purchase of obligations of foreign Governments and in the purchase of United States bonds for retirement from repayments by foreign Governments on account of the principal of their obligations purchased by the United States (H. Doc. No. 478); to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed.

750. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting statement of all judgments rendered by the Court of Claims for the year ended December 2, 1922, the amount thereof, the parties in whose favor rendered, and the nature of the claims; to the Committee on Claims.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12940) granting a pension to Sophia Hubbard; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12941) granting a pension to John H. Boyd; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. STRONG of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 13125) to amend sections 3, 4, 6, 9, 12, and 15 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BRENNAN: A bill (H. R. 13126) to amend Article IV of the war risk insurance act by adding to section 408 thereof, as added by section 27 of the act creating the Veterans' Bureau, approved on August 9, 1921, a new proviso; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PROTECTION OF LIFE IN THE NEAR EAST.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a telegram from a number of prominent citizens of the State of New York relating to the situation in Asia Minor. It is in the nature somewhat of a petition. It is not long. I ask unanimous consent that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. JAMES W. WADSWORTH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Our Secretary of State in Boston on October 30th stated that the United States will have no diplomatic relations with Mexico while Mexico fails to respect property rights, but he expressed no unwillingness to have friendly relations with Turkey.

The Secretary of State said, "We do, however, maintain one clear principle of international intercourse—that international obligations shall be met and that there shall be no confiscation or repudiation."

Let us hope this nation will not pursue a policy where commercial interests triumph over the true spirit of humanitarianism so dear to every American nor refrain from declaring as unequivocally for human rights at home and abroad as it has for property rights, nor fail to make clear that it will withhold diplomatic relations from nations which permit wholesale slaughter of racial, political, or religious minorities within their borders.

History abundantly proves that Turkish promises and guarantees are worthless when affecting minorities under their rule.

It is anticipated that further massacres by Turks will occur in Constantinople and Thrace, from which countries all non-Moslems are now fleeing with loss of their property in order to save their lives.

If international intercourse is withheld in order to protect property rights, how much more incumbent upon us is it to hold human life sacred for the defenseless.

The sentiment of this country will never sanction a policy which holds property rights more sacred than human rights.

America owes it to herself to call upon the Government at Washington to broaden its present policy of protection of commercial rights and property rights so as to include the protection of the most sacred rights of all—human liberty and human life.

ADMISSION OF ARMENIAN AND GREEK REFUGEES.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I have in my hand a letter from Bishop Hugh L. Burleson, of the Episcopal Diocese of South Dakota, relating to legislation concerning the admission of Armenian and Greek refugees to the United States. The letter is short, and I should like to have it read and referred to the Committee on Immigration with the accompanying papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter as requested.

The letter was read and referred to the Committee on Immigration, as follows:

BISHOP'S HOUSE,
Sioux Falls, S. Dak., November 27, 1922.

Hon. THOMAS STERLING,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am deeply interested in the matter of providing admission into this country for Greek and Armenian refugees who are coming to responsible relatives. I understand that they are now denied admission because the annual immigration quotas for Greeks and Turks are exhausted.

It would seem to me a wise policy for Congress to make possible the admission of a limited number in excess of the quotas coming to families who will guarantee that they shall not become public charges. It would be the most practical and human way to provide for at least a portion of these destitute and suffering people.

I trust you will feel able to use your influence to bring this about.

Faithfully yours,

HUGH L. BURLESON.

Mr. STERLING. I submit in connection with the letter a resolution adopted by the department of Christian Social Service of the Episcopal Church, which I ask may be inserted in the RECORD without reading, together with the names of the signers.

There being no objection, the resolution, with the accompanying names, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Immigration, as follows:

A resolution concerning emergency immigration legislation to relieve Near East refugees.

Whereas at Ellis Island many Greek and Armenian refugees from Constantinople and Asia Minor coming to relatives in America are being denied admission because the annual immigration quotas for Greece and Turkey (to which they belong) are exhausted; and

Whereas American Greeks and Armenians desire to bring to safety in America their relatives now suffering privations after evacuating Smyrna, Constantinople, and Thrace, but can not do so because the quotas for the year have been exhausted; and

Whereas the enactment of restrictive immigration legislation can be made compatible with the traditional American policy of offering asylum in emergency to victims of religious and political persecutions: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the department of Christian Social Service of the Episcopal Church urge the administration to take necessary action to prevent the exclusion of these refugees from Asia Minor and Thrace now at our ports of entry, and to make possible the admission of a limited number of such refugees in excess of quota coming to families who shall guarantee that they shall not become public charges; and that the social service department of the Episcopal Church inform its constituency of this action and ask the secretaries that if they approve they take it up with their representatives in Congress.

DECEMBER 1, 1922.

Additional signatures received at the office of the department of Christian Social Service indorsing the resolution sent to you November 27, 1922, regarding the admission to the United States of the Greek and Armenian refugees from Asia Minor and Thrace.

Mr. LADD presented resolutions adopted by the Federated Shop Crafts of Devils Lake, Grand Forks, and Minot, all in the State of North Dakota, favoring prompt action by the Federal Government to remedy faulty condition of railroad operating equipment, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of Mrs. George Beagle and 5 others, of Werner; Sam P. Sjeislee and 9 others, of Braddock; A. W. Johnson and 11 others, of Gwinner; Gottlich Krieger and 11 others, of Manfred; Arthur H. Olson and 67 others, of Osnabrock; A. C. Wild and 52 others, of Egeland; William Claughton and 17 others, of Hensel; Charles McGawey and Ole Sather and 41 others, of Bismarck; Philip Kavey and 9 others, of Glen Ullen; Martin R. Svor and Ole Hersel and 18 others, of Tioga; 36 citizens of Sargent County; 70 citizens of Nelson County; James A. Reinke and 50 others, of Hankinson; Gustaf Job and 35 others, of Linton; S. E. Brown and 25 others, of Wolford; Mrs. Anton Anderson and 15 others, of Lunds Valley; Mrs. Robert Thoslaw and 39 others, of Overly; Mrs. Theresa Merritt and 22 others, of Maxbass; Mrs. S. B. Irwin and 21 others, of Hillsboro; and Mrs. J. Boe and 29 others, of Turtle Lake, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation to stabilize the prices of wheat, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. NICHOLSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2792) for the relief of John L. Livingston, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 932) thereon.

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 29) expressing the sense of the Senate and House of Representatives that Members failing of reelection should not participate in the enactment of legislation which the people at the polls had sought to repudiate, submitted by Mr. CARAWAY November 22, 1922, reported it with an amendment in the nature of a joint resolution, and submitted a report (No. 933) thereon.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 253) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, fixing the commencement of the terms of President and Vice President and Members of Congress, and providing for the election of President and Vice President by direct vote, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. UNDERWOOD:

A bill (S. 4089) granting an increase of pension to William Wells; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 4090) granting a pension to Charles P. H. Poppe; and

A bill (S. 4091) granting a pension to Isaac G. Shaw; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KEYES:

A bill (S. 4092) providing for the admission into the United States of certain refugees from near eastern countries; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

A bill (S. 4093) to provide seamen on American vessels with a continuous discharge book, to provide for improved efficiency and discipline, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 4094) granting an increase of pension to William Elliott (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 4095) to enlarge the public building at Bismarck, N. Dak. (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 4096) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the enunciation of the Monroe doctrine; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 4097) granting a pension to Fanny Meyer Hubbard; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 4098) granting a pension to Eliza Dunn Minard (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4099) granting an increase of pension to Phebe S. Riley (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 4100) to amend section 9 of the trading with the enemy act, as amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REGENTS OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. LODGE. I introduce a joint resolution, for which I ask immediate consideration. It has not been customary to refer such joint resolutions to a committee.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 251), providing for the filling of two vacancies that will occur on January 14, 1923, and March 1, 1923, respectively, in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Members of Congress, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the two vacancies that will occur as herein specified in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Members of Congress, be filled by the reappointment of Henry White, of the city of Washington, whose term will expire January 14, 1923, and of John B. Henderson, of the city of Washington, whose term will expire March 1, 1923.

The Senate by unanimous consent proceeded to consider the joint resolution as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question? Under existing law how are these appointments made?

Mr. LODGE. They are made by the Congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REFUGEES FROM THRACE AND ASIA MINOR.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask to be read at length and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 252) to permit the admission of certain refugees from Thrace and Asia Minor was read the first time by its title and the second time at length and referred to the Committee on Immigration, as follows:

Whereas the recent war between Greece and Turkey has resulted in the expulsion from Asia Minor and Thrace of more than a million Armenians, Greeks, and Syrians;

Whereas these refugees can not obtain proper food, shelter, or protection in the places to which they have been forced to flee, and devastation, starvation, and persecution await them if they attempt to return to their former homes; and

Whereas numerous relatives and friends in the United States have offered homes, protection, and employment for many of these refugees if they can be admitted into this country: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved May 19, 1921, as amended, is amended by adding thereto the following new subdivision:

"(e) Refugees from Thrace or Asia Minor may be admitted, if otherwise admissible, notwithstanding the limitation upon the number of aliens admissible in the same month or fiscal year."

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. BORAH submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

SARAH ORR.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 374), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate, be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Sarah Orr the sum of $372.94 for services as clerk from October 3, 1922, to November 21, 1922, rendered the Hon. Rebecca Latimer Felton, a Senator from the State of Georgia.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. LODGE, it was Ordered, That the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] be excused from further service on the Committee on Naval Affairs and assigned to service on the Committee on Appropriations; that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] be assigned to service on the Committee on Commerce; that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] be assigned to service on the Committee on Naval Affairs; that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] be assigned to service on the Committee on Education and Labor, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, the Committee on Military Affairs, and the Committee on Manufactures.

STATISTICS OF FOREIGN COMMERCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3295) to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce, which were read.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. FLETCHER conferees on the part of the Senate.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The President pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3275) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars, and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. BURSUM, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. WALSH of Montana conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were each read twice by title and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 11040. An act to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the sale of the marine hospital reservation in Cleveland, Ohio," approved July 26, 1916; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

H. R. 12174. An act to authorize the Attorney General to convey certain land of the United States to Fulton County, Ga., to widen McDonough Road in front of the United States penitentiary; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that when the consideration of the calendar is proceeded with, it be limited to unobjected bills. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, why should the calendar be taken up in that way?

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator from Alabama will permit me, I desire to suggest that the calendar was taken up just a week or two before the final adjournment of the session which ended in September last. It was considered on a Saturday, I think, while the Senator from Alabama was absent. Some one hundred and fifty-odd bills were then disposed of, and the bills remaining on the calendar only embrace about five pages.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not going to object at this time to the request of the Senator from Kansas, but I merely desire to state that there are a number of bills on the calendar which, though really controversial, now that there is no other business pending before the Senate, I think, should have an opportunity to be considered.

Mr. CURTIS. The reason why I have asked for the unanimous-consent order is because no Senator has notified us that he was ready to have taken up on the calendar any bill as to which there was a contest; and I thought that during the day if any Senator was interested in a bill of that character he could notify the Senate and the bill could then, probably, be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas, and it is agreed to. The Secretary will proceed with the call of the calendar under the unanimous-consent order.

The bill (S. 214) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as first in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1467) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being objected to, the bill will go over.

The resolution (S. Res. 67) authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to hold hearings here or elsewhere and to employ a stenographer to report the same was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair observes that the resolution has been reported with amendments.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 491) to provide, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PITTMAN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

WALTER RUNKE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1829) for the relief of Walter Runke, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments on page 1, line 8, after the word "his," to strike out "defense" and insert "defenses"; in the same line, after the word "his," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "trial" and to insert "trials"; in line 10, after the article "the," to strike out "month of March, 1918, his alleged offense having been committed in performance of his official duties and he having been acquitted," and in lieu thereof to insert "months of September, 1916, and March, 1918, his alleged offenses having been committed in the performance of his official duties, the charge against him in the first trial having been dismissed after a severance and after acquittal of his late co-defendants, and he having been acquitted in the second trial," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That not to exceed $4,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated to enable the Secretary of the Interior to reimburse Walter Runke, of Flagstaff, Ariz., formerly superintendent of the Western Navajo Indian Agency, Ariz., for actual and necessary expenses incurred by him from personal funds in connection with his defenses upon his trials in the United States District Court for the District of Arizona during the months of September, 1916, and March, 1918, his alleged offenses having been committed in the performance of his official duties, the charge against him in the first trial having been dismissed after a severance and after acquittal of his late co-defendants, and he having been acquitted in the second trial.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF LOANS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 7) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real estate brokers in the District of Columbia," approved February 4, 1913, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real estate brokers in the District of Columbia, approved February 4, 1913," be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That no such person, firm, voluntary association, joint-stock company, incorporated society, or corporation shall charge or receive, either directly or indirectly, or by means of any collateral or contemporaneous arrangement, a greater rate of interest upon any loan made by him or it than 2 per cent per month on the actual amount of the loan, and this charge shall cover all fees, expenses, demands, and services of every character, including notarial and recording fees and charges, except upon the foreclosure of the security. The foregoing interest shall not be deducted from the principal of loan when same is made. Every such person, firm, voluntary association, joint-stock company, incorporated society, or corporation conducting such business shall furnish the borrower a written, typewritten, or printed statement at the time the loan is made, showing, in English, in clear and distinct terms, the amount of the loan, the date when loaned and when due, the person to whom the loan is made, the name of the lender, the amount of interest charged, and the lender shall give the borrower a plain and complete receipt for all payments made on account of the loan at the time such payments are made. No such loan greater than $200 shall, except pawnbrokers' loans, be made to any one person: Provided, That any person contracting, directly or indirectly, for or receiving a greater rate of interest than that fixed in this act shall forfeit all interest so contracted for or received; and in addition thereto shall forfeit to the borrower a sum of money, to be deducted from the amount due for principal, equal to one-fourth of the principal sum: And provided further, That any person in the employ of the Government who shall loan money in violation of the provisions of this act shall forfeit his office or position and be removed from the same."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity to study this bill, but I have been informed that it authorizes the collection of as much as 2 per cent interest per month on certain classes of loans. I inquire of the sponsor for this bill whether that information is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that the author of the bill is not present.

Mr. ROBINSON. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

FOREIGN TRADE ZONES.

The bill (S. 2391) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, that bill can not be disposed of, I presume, under the unanimous-consent order. Therefore I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 2228) to amend certain sections of the Judicial Code relating to the Court of Claims was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a long bill, and I wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota if he desires to have it considered this morning.

Mr. NELSON. I think the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] has an amendment which he desires to propose to the bill. That Senator not being present, I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Senator from Tennessee had made a statement to that effect.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I would like to ask if this is a bill which provides for the appointment of referees for the Court of Claims?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; it is the bill which the Senator has in mind.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, of course if there is any reason for the bill going over, I have no objection; but I wish to say that in the days when the Court of Claims merely tried cases growing out of the Civil War, which had arisen many years back and many of which had been thrashed out, it did not take so much of the time of the court or involve excessive labor to dispose of the cases pending there.

I think, however, the time has come when the Congress and the executive branch of the Government should realize that there are over $2,000,000,000 worth of claims against the United States Government pending in the Court of Claims and that the business of that court can not be attended to properly and the rights of the Government protected unless we give the court facilities to transact its business. It is impossible for the five judges of that court, under the present conditions and with the facilities now afforded them, to keep up with their work. It is an excellent court and is doing a splendid work; it is rarely that its decisions are reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States; but it must be provided with the proper facilities. It desires the power proposed to be given by this bill to appoint referees to consider matters and to present findings of fact in order that there may be exceptions made to the findings of the referees, the cases expedited, and the real issue brought to the court.

Unless there is some good reason why this bill should be passed over, this being the short session of Congress and there being no business pressing at this time, I think the present an excellent opportunity to act upon this measure and provide facilities which will expedite the business of the court. I trust the bill may be considered.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I should be very glad to have the bill considered. I wish to state to the Senator that the bill, which was reported at a previous session of Congress, provided, among other things, for an increase in the salary of one of the officials of the court, namely, the clerk of the court. He was only receiving $3,500 and the bill proposed to increase the compensation to $5,000. On that account the Senator from Utah made strenuous opposition to the bill. At the last regular session, however, the Appropriations Committee allowed the clerk of the court a salary of $5,000 a year as was provided in the bill, and that is the law to-day. The other provisions of the bill relate mainly to appointment of commissioners or referees, as the Senator calls them, to assist the court by taking testimony and submitting findings.

The Senator is entirely right in saying that a great mass of cases has accumulated, especially war claims, within the last year or so, and the court is excessively crowded with business. As Senators know, no jury serve in the Court of Claims, and there is a need that testimony may be taken by referees. The bill ought to pass, and I should be very glad to have it taken up now. Heretofore there has been no opposition to the bill in any shape or manner except, as I recall, the opposition to increasing the salary of the clerk of the court.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And that has already been accomplished by a provision of the appropriation bill?

Mr. NELSON. That question has been settled by the action of the Appropriations Committee in appropriating $5,000 to cover the salary of the clerk of the court, and therefore the pending bill in that particular will simply be a reenactment of the existing law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am in favor of the bill, but as the Senator from Minnesota will probably remember, when the bill was under consideration on a previous occasion the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] gave notice that he desired to offer an amendment. That is the only reason why I suggest that it should go over, the Senator from Tennessee not being present at this time.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I wish to say further to the Senator from Alabama that the Senator from Tennessee desired to offer an amendment to open the door to a class of war claims which were excluded by an amendment to the law adopted some years ago, and I think the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] cooperated with him.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should be very glad to support the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee. I believe as to those cases the door ought to be opened, but I am unwilling to consent that this bill shall go over when I know that outside of the rights of the Government which should be protected, there are many people who have legitimate war claims which are entitled to trial. This bill merely provides for the appointment by the court of referees or commissioners, who will not receive any pay unless they do the work, and if they do the work, I think, in the end, the expense will be charged against the litigants, to one side or the other. The bill is to enable the court to transact its business.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I merely desire to state that the Senator from Tennessee is very much interested in an amendment that he has heretofore proposed to this bill; and on another occasion he requested me, if the bill came up for consideration, either to present his amendment or to ask that the consideration of the bill be deferred until he could be present and offer it himself.

I ask, therefore, that the bill go over for the present, unless the Senator from Alabama insists upon taking it up now. If he does, I shall get the amendment and offer it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, Senators are entitled to have it go over on objection, and, of course, I do not want to interfere with what the Senator from Tennessee desires; but I am very much afraid that if we do not take up this bill on the calendar very shortly it will not pass this Congress, and if that should happen it would deprive a lot of people of their rights.

Mr. ROBINSON. I share the view of the Senator from Alabama. The bill may go over for the present. I will procure the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, and the bill may be called up later during the day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator asks that it go over without prejudice, so that it can be taken up later?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Alabama that, as I understand the amendment that the Senator from Tennessee proposes, it is to reopen the door for the old cotton claims that were excluded by the Crawford amendment that we passed some years ago.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what it is.

Mr. NELSON. And that has occasioned the delay.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I see no reason why we should not have a vote on that proposition. It would not take very long. It would not be necessary to debate it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

AMENDMENT OF TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1920.

The bill (H. R. 8331) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PITTMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS.

The bill (S. 1452) providing for establishing shooting grounds for the public, for establishing game refuges and breeding grounds, for protecting migratory birds, and requiring a Federal license to hunt them, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, pending a request for consideration of the bill, I desire to state an amendment to which I am informed the author of the bill has no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is already an amendment pending.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; I am only stating the amendment which I intend to propose. I shall offer to amend the bill by inserting, at an appropriate place, the following language:

> Nothing in this act contained shall be construed as subjecting any land acquired, held, or used by the United States for military purposes to any of the provisions of this act.

I am informed that the sponsor of the bill has no objection to that amendment.

Mr. NEW. As the author of the bill, Mr. President, I will say that that is true.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I dislike to object to the immediate consideration of the bill; but there is one provision in it to which I am opposed, and that is the provision for a Federal license. Is the Senator from Indiana wedded to that provision of the bill?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the whole carrying out of the purposes of this bill depends absolutely upon that feature of it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am going to ask that the bill may go over without prejudice, because I want to prepare an amendment to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. I withhold the request for a minute if the Senator wants to say something to me about it.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, what has been said by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] concerning the urgency for the consideration of the bill under discussion a moment ago applies with equal force and aptitude to this bill. It is very apparent that unless it is considered now, before certain other matters of major importance are brought up, it will not be considered at all at this session and will die. It has been on the calendar exactly one year to-day, and I think it ought to be considered on its merits.

Of course, I am not in any way interfering with the right of any Senator to object. That is all right; but if objection is made at this time, I wish to give notice that when the call of the calendar shall have been made I shall move that the bill be taken up for consideration.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, just one moment. I have no desire to delay the consideration of the bill. I desire to offer an amendment to it, and I have not had an opportunity to prepare it. If the bill might go over for an hour I should not object to returning to it and considering it. I want an opportunity to offer an amendment.

Mr. NEW. Why, certainly, Mr. President. With that understanding the bill may be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the bill is temporarily passed over, subject to the right of the Senator from Indiana to call it up at a later time in this session.

TRANSPORTATION OF MILITARY SUPPLIES.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 138) authorizing the payment of the cost of transportation for certain supplies purchased by the Military Establishment was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

> Resolved, etc., That hereafter when supplies for the Military Establishment are accepted by the United States at factory or other point of origin and are shipped to destination at the expense of the United States, the cost of such transportation may be paid from the appropriation from which the supplies are purchased.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing transportation for dependents of Army field clerks and field clerks Quartermaster Corps was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2718) to provide for leasing of the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La., was announced as next in order.

Mr. CALDER. Let that be passed over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2589) to amend section 11 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," approved January 15, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 67) for the relief of the heirs of Adam and Noah Brown was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1539) for the relief of Watson B. Dickerman, administrator of the estate of Charles Backman, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1861) authorizing the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim of Capt. David McD. Shearer for compensation for the adoption and use and acquisition by the United States Government of his patented inventions, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SUPPLY CORPS OF THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 2390) to redistribute the number of officers in the several grades of the Supply Corps of the Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the paragraph in the act of August 29, 1916, which reads as follows: "One-half pay directors with the rank of rear admiral to 4 pay directors with the rank of captain, to 8 pay inspectors with the rank of commander, to 87½ in the grades below pay inspectors," be amended to read as follows: "One-half pay directors with the rank of rear admiral to 6 pay directors with the rank of captain, to 12 pay inspectors with the rank of commander, to 81½ in the grades below pay inspector: Provided, That after January 1, 1923, no vacancies as pay directors with the rank of captain, and pay inspectors with the rank of commander, shall be filled until the numbers have been reduced to those authorized by the act of August 29, 1916."

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah asks for information concerning the bill. This is a bill to increase the number of higher officers in the Pay Corps of the Navy, and at the same time to reduce the number of lower officers. It is a bill that has been reported favorably by the Naval Affairs Committee on several occasions, and unanimously reported. It was introduced originally at the request of the Secretary of the Navy when Mr. Daniels was Secretary of the Navy. It has since been introduced at the request of the present Secretary of the Navy. The reason for it, as given by the Secretary of the Navy in his letter to the committee, is that they have not a sufficient number of officers of the grade of commander in the Navy to perform the services allotted.

I ask to have the report read.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not care about it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Very well; the Senator understands the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, this is a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution. It is quite an important matter, and I do not think it could be disposed of by unanimous consent; so I ask that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 14) providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2992) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish certain information for historical purposes to the adjutants general of the several States and the District of Columbia, and making an appropriation therefor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, what is the calendar number of that bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is Order of Business No. 510.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not on the printed calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that on April 5, 1922, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] asked that the bill be returned to the Senate, and entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was passed.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3254) to encourage the development of the agricultural resources of the United States through Federal and State cooperation, giving preference in the matter of employment and the establishment of rural homes to those who have served with the military and naval forces of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1343) granting relief to persons who served in the Military Telegraph Corps of the Army during the Civil War was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PAY OF THE ARMY, ETC.

The bill (S. 3326) to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this bill, with a House number, long since passed the Congress and has become a law. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1345) to amend an act entitled "Interstate commerce act," approved February 28, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1346) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, including the safety-appliance acts and the act providing for the valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission, approved March 1, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 2921) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was announced as next in order

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

DETAIL OF RETIRED OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN.

The bill (S. 2371) to further amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effective provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, be, and is hereby, further amended as follows:

That the second sentence of section 40b of said act approved June 3, 1916, as contained in section 33 of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"In time of peace retired officers, retired warrant officers, or retired enlisted men shall not be detailed under the provisions of this section without their consent."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920.

COOPERATIVE ORGANIZATIONS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) creating a committee to investigate existing conditions of industry and commerce in the United States for the purpose of recommending to Congress legislation defining the rights and limitations of cooperative organizations as distinguished from illicit combinations in restraint of trade, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

CORNWELL CO., SAGINAW, MICH.

The bill (H. R. 449) for the relief of the Cornwell Co., Saginaw, Mich., was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over, unless there is some explanation made of it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Has the Senator from North Carolina read the report?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I have not. I merely wanted to have some explanation of the bill. I said I would object unless somebody would explain it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The report shows very clearly just what the facts are. This defendant in a case brought against it was a codefendant with one of the packing companies, as I remember. Their case was tried and decided against the Government. This case, which was simply the case of dealers who had taken off shipments along the line on through traffic, was decided by the original case. The codefendant was not found guilty, and it is recommended that this be allowed. These people were not responsible. They were acting in accordance with a custom which had obtained for a great many years, and it was not their fault that they were not complying with the order which was affirmed later by the court in reference to the original packing company, not the Saginaw company.

Mr. OVERMAN. What was the crime charged?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Getting carload rates on less-than-carload lots. They were allowed to stop off on the road to sell their goods, and had been doing it. That was a violation of the statute. If the Senator would read the evidence in reference to this matter, he would find that this company should not be held under any construction that could be placed upon the law.

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the Cornwell Co., Saginaw, Mich., successor to the Saginaw Beef Co., the sum of $8,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, being the amount of money collected from the Saginaw Beef Co. by fine imposed by District Judge Sessions, at Grand Rapids, Mich., on August 28, 1914.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMOVALS FROM THE BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

The resolution (S. Res. 269) authorizing the appointment of a committee to report the facts and reasons relative to the removal by order of the President of responsible officials of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing was announced as next in order.

Mr. STERLING. I think the resolution should be indefinitely postponed. There has been an adverse report pending here against it, together with the following resolution. Adverse reports were made upon both, and I ask that they be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator from Arkansas here.

Mr. LODGE. He is here.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think he cares to have it retained on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota moves that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED DEMOTIONS AND DISCHARGES.

The resolution (S. Res. 271) requesting the President to inform Congress as to alleged demotion, dropping, and discharge of honorably discharged sailors and soldiers from the service since March 4, 1921, was announced as next in order.

Mr. STERLING. I ask that the same action be taken with regard to this resolution. I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

SALARIES OF SCHOOL-TEACHERS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 3136) to amend the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 8, line 19, after the words "present salary," to strike out the word "including" and to insert the words "which present salary shall include."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, to strike out section 16, as follows:

SEC. 16. That the Board of Education, on the recommendation of the superintendent of schools, is hereby authorized to fix and prescribe the salaries, other than those herein specified to be paid all employees in the community center department, the night schools, the vacation schools, the Americanization schools, and such other activities as may hereafter be authorized, from lump-sum appropriations.

And to insert in lieu:

SEC. 16. That the Board of Education is hereby authorized to conduct as a part of the public-school system a community center department, a department of school attendance and work permits, night schools, vacation schools, Americanization schools, and other activities, under and within appropriations made by Congress, and, on the recommendation of the superintendent of schools, to fix and prescribe the salaries, other than those herein specified, to be paid to the employees of the said activities.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish the Senator from Kansas would explain why that section is in this bill, a bill increasing the salaries of the school-teachers in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. They ought to be increased.

Mr. SMOOT. This section has nothing at all to do with salary increases.

Section 16 provides:

That the Board of Education is hereby authorized to conduct as a part of the public-school system a community center department, a department of school attendance and work permits, night schools, vacation schools, Americanization schools, and other activities, under and within appropriations made by Congress, and, on the recommendation of the superintendent of schools, to fix and prescribe the salaries, other than those herein specified, to be paid to the employees of the said activities.

Mr. CAPPER. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the section creates no new activities in the schools of Washington. It simply authorizes a continuation of work that is already being carried on here.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And within the appropriations made.

Mr. CAPPER. Within the appropriations made by Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. Then there is no necessity for it.

Mr. CAPPER. It makes provision as to what the salaries shall be in those departments.

Mr. SMOOT. And it is desired that provision be made so that the Board of Education can pay them any salary they want.

Mr. CAPPER. Not at all. If the Senator will examine the bill he will find that it undertakes to classify those departments of the schools.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if we are going into all these activities on the part of the schools, which, if authorized, are authorized under a law with which I am not familiar, I think I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill. I have no objection whatever to the other part, which fixes the salaries of the school-teachers in the District of Columbia. I have no objection whatever to that part of the bill.

Mr. CAPPER. This does not introduce a new department in the school system here; it does not create a new position; it does not in any way increase the cost of the school system as it now exists.

Mr. SMOOT. Then there is no necessity for it; it is absolutely unnecessary; and I think that part ought to go out of the bill.

Mr. CAPPER. The committee considered it very carefully and were of the opinion that it ought to stay in.

Mr. SMOOT. I am taking the word of the Senator that it does not create a new activity in the schools; that all the activities are already provided for under the law. The salaries are to be paid out of the appropriations provided, and therefore it seems to me it would be perfectly useless, and there is no necessity for it at all. I can not tell from the mere reading of it exactly how far it goes or what is going to be the cost.

Mr. CAPPER. The entire school program has been carried on without any permanent school organization measure. This undertakes to set up a school program and give some authority under law, and give the teaching force and the various agencies connected with it a place in the school system, which they have not had heretofore.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it is a change in law, and is an attempt to create this new system. There has been quite a dispute in the Senate as to the community center department and a dispute in Congress as to whether the appropriations should be made for it. In fact, the last appropriation asked for the community center department was refused by Congress after the expenditure of the $25,000 which had been authorized the year before. But the bill does not stop at that. It includes the department of school attendance and work permits, vocational schools, Americanization schools, and other activities. In other words, it grants power to the school board to undertake any kind of activity that they see fit. There is apparently no limit to it at all.

Mr. CAPPER. The department of school attendance and work permits was created about three months ago in a measure which combined the two activities. The pending bill simply gives it its proper place in the school system of the city of Washington.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is now made compulsory from this time forward.

Mr. CAPPER. We have had it for years.

Mr. SMOOT. Not all the activities covered by this provision.

Mr. CAPPER. As I said, it does not introduce a new agency of any kind.

Mr. SMOOT. Take the question of Americanization schools. We may be called upon to appropriate $150,000 for that purpose in the District of Columbia if this provision becomes a law. The Senator can not tell how much it would be. Does the Senator say we have those schools now in the District of Columbia?

Mr. CAPPER. Yes; we have Americanization schools.

Mr. SMOOT. That is under the law as previously enacted, but not as a part of the school system of the District nor under the school board of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAPPER. It is in full operation and has been for years. This provision simply undertakes to give it a place in the school system.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator to allow the bill to go over for a day, and I will find out from some source in the District what they are doing about it and what it really means.

Mr. CAPPER. That is entirely satisfactory, but I will say to the Senator that I regard this as a very important measure.

We are losing in the city of Washington many of the best teachers we have.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will agree to eliminate section 16, I am perfectly willing the bill should pass at this time. I would have no objection to it then at all.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Kansas whether this is not merely a matter of raising salaries for the different teachers?

Mr. CAPPER. That is the main purpose of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand it will cost the Government $250,000 in increased salaries for the District of Columbia. I have no objection to that at all.

Mr. CAPPER. I will accept the Senator's suggestion, and consent to the elimination of section 16.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I am perfectly willing, if that section is eliminated, that the bill shall pass.

Mr. CAPPER. That will be satisfactory to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee inserting section 16.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee proposes to strike out section 16 of the bill, in the following words:

SEC. 16. That the board of education, on the recommendation of the superintendent of schools, is hereby authorized to fix and prescribe the salaries, other than those herein specified to be paid all employees in the community center department, the night schools, the vacation schools, the Americanization schools, and such other activities as may hereafter be authorized, from lump-sum appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 10, after the word "fund," to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, no teacher, officer, or other employee of the board of education whose salary is fixed by this act shall receive any additional increase of compensation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, while we are talking about increasing the salaries of teachers and getting better efficiency in the schools of the District of Columbia, some effort ought to be made to furnish better light in the school buildings of the District. I am told that on dark days it is almost impossible for the children to see. I hope the Committee on the District of Columbia will look into that proposition and give the children better light in the schoolrooms.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLLECTION OF TAXES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 3565) relating to the collection of taxes in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The provisions of the bill have been incorporated practically in the District of Columbia appropriation bill and are now the law. I therefore move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3384) authorizing an appropriation to meet proportionate expenses of providing a drainage system for Paiute Indian lands in the State of Nevada within the Newlands reclamation project of the Reclamation Service was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 171) to extend the provisions of the act of May 11, 1912, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over until I can look into it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 227) rejecting bids for the acquisition of Muscle Shoals was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

ANTILYNCHING BILL.

The bill (H. R. 13) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the bill had better go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF COTTON FUTURES ACT.

The bill (S. 385) to amend section 5 of the United States cotton futures act, approved August 11, 1916, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed. I think all the provisions contained in it are covered in the next bill on the calendar, which is really a substitute for the bill just reached.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from South Carolina if the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is agreeable to an indefinite postponement of the bill? As I understand, the Senator from Louisiana is opposed to the next bill on the calendar but is in favor of this one.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Both bills were introduced by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL].

Mr. DIAL. I understand that the Senator from Louisiana is opposed to both bills.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator is sure of that, I have no objection to the bill being indefinitely postponed.

Mr. DIAL. Oh, yes; I know he is willing that it be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina, to indefinitely postpone the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill (S. 3146) to amend section 5 of the United States cotton futures act was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. DIAL. With regard to the bill just passed over, I wish to say that I intend to ask at an early date that it be made the unfinished business of the Senate. The principle involved in the bill is worth more to the people of my section and the people of the United States generally than any other remedial legislation we could enact. I hope in the near future we shall have an opportunity to vote on the bill.

RESOLUTION INDEFINITELY POSTPONED.

The resolution (S. Res. 330) authorizing a special committee to report to the Senate the results of its investigation concerning the financial interests of Senators in matters affected by the pending tariff bill was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is not the resolution out of date?

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go under Rule IX.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does my colleague [Mr. CALDER] have any objection to its going to Rule IX, or to its indefinite postponement? It is quite meaningless now.

Mr. CALDER. I move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS AND RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 843) for the relief of Augusta Reiter was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW. The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] desires to be present when this bill is considered, and in his absence I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3858) to define butter and to provide a standard therefor was announced as next in order.

Mr. STERLING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 335) directing the Federal Reserve Board to require the Federal reserve banks of Atlanta, Dallas, St. Louis, and Kansas City to report to the Senate the rates of interest charged by them on loans and discounts in 1920 and 1921, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

The bill (H. R. 211) to extend the provisions of the pension act of May 11, 1912, and May 1, 1920, to the officers and enlisted men of all State militia and other State organizations that rendered service to the Union cause during the Civil War for a period of 90 days or more, and providing pensions for their widows, minor children, and dependent parents, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PROTECTION OF UNITED STATES MAILS.

The bill (S. 3962) to prohibit the sending of threatening letters through the mails, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments on page 1, to strike out "whether or not the sender of such letter, pamphlet, card, writing, or other written or printed matter makes any demand for money, property, or other consideration"; and on page 2, line 5, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$3,000"; and in line 6 to strike out the word "five" and insert "two," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That every letter, pamphlet, card, writing, or other written or printed matter threatening bodily harm or injury to the person or property of the person addressed, or of any member of his household, is hereby declared to be nonmailable matter and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or by any letter carrier. Any person who knowingly deposits or causes to be deposited for mailing or delivery any such letter, pamphlet, card, writing, or other written or printed matter shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNA CLAUDE HOWARD.

The bill (S. 1883) granting a pension to Anna Claude Howard was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Anna Claude Howard, widow of Thomas Benton Howard, late rear admiral, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEO BALSAM.

The bill (H. R. 6251) for the relief of Leo Balsam was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Leo Balsam, of Plattsburg, N. Y., the sum of $1,282.50, in full compensation for repair at contract price of 950 pairs of shoes destroyed by fire when the gymnasium at Plattsburg Barracks, N. Y., was destroyed on November 28, 1917.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask is the Government responsible in a case of that kind? This bill covers a claim for the destruction of certain shoes in a Government barracks.

Mr. CAPPER. On page 4 of the report there is found the following statement in a letter from the Judge Advocate General:

As to the 950 pairs of shoes which it is stated were actually completed on November 28, 1917, it is the opinion of this office that the bailee is entitled to payment therefor.

The pending bill covers only the 950 pairs of shoes, so I think there can be no question that the claimant is entitled to be reimbursed as provided in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

THOMAS B. SMITH.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8264) for the relief of Thomas B. Smith. It proposes to pay to Thomas B. Smith, of Cheriton, Va., $185.66, to reimburse him for expenses incurred by him from April 20 to June 6, 1917, for travel performed by him while an ensign with the United States Naval Reserve Force attached to the Seventh Squadron, United States Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANT OF LANDS TO OGDEN, UTAH.

The bill (S. 3598) granting certain lands to the city of Ogden, Utah, to protect the watershed of the water supply system of said city, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 1, line 2, after the word "That," to insert "upon the payment of $1.25 per acre," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the payment of $1.25 per acre there is hereby granted to the city of Ogden, Utah, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to issue patent to said grantee for certain public lands in Utah for the protection of the watershed furnishing the water for said city, the lands being described as follows:

SEC. 2. That the conveyance hereby authorized shall not include any lands which, at the date of the issuance of patent, shall be covered by a valid existing bona fide right or claim initiated under the laws of the United States: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, and other mineral deposits that may be found on the lands so granted and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same: Provided further, That said city shall not have the right to sell or convey the land herein granted, or any part thereof, or to devote the same to any other purpose than as hereinbefore described; and if the said land shall not be used for such municipal purpose the same, or such parts thereof not so used, shall revert to the United States. The conditions and reservations herein provided for shall be expressed in the patent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RUBE ALLEN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3595) to reimburse Rube Allen for losses and damages sustained by him through the negligent dipping of tick-infested cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$7,344.49" and to insert "$6,445.04," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,445.04 to Rube Allen for loss and damage sustained by him through the negligence of the veterinary inspectors employed by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, in their failure to properly dip 120 head of Texas cattle that were shipped from Fort Worth stockyards in April, 1919, by Fred Nation to Kansas, where they infested the native Kansas cattle with the Texas fever tick. Said sum to be paid to the above-named party in full for all loss and damage sustained by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM MALONE.

The bill (H. R. 1463) for the relief of William Malone was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to William Malone $75, being the cost of an abstract of title sent to the Commissioner of the General Land Office in August, 1916, and lost by some employee of that office.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEROY FISHER.

The bill (H. R. 1862) for the relief of Leroy Fisher was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Leroy Fisher $1,500 for expenses incurred as a result of injuries sustained through being hit by an auto truck, the property of the United States Post Office Department and driven recklessly by an employee of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATIONS.

The bill (H. R. 8996) to amend paragraph 440, section 5211, act June 3, 1864, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments on page 1, line 3, after the word "That," to strike out "paragraph 440 of section 5211 of the act of June 3, 1864, as amended, 1877, be" and to insert "section 5211 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, be further"; and on line 7, before the word "Every," to strike out "440" and to insert "Sec. 5211"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5211 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, be further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5211. Every association shall make to the Comptroller of the Currency not less than three reports during each year, according to the form which may be prescribed by him, verified by the oath or affirmation of the president or cashier of such association, and attested by the signature of at least three of the directors. Each such report shall exhibit, in detail and under appropriate heads, the resources and liabilities of the association at the close of business on any past day by him specified, and shall be transmitted to the comptroller within five days after the receipt of a request or requisition therefor from him, and in the same form in which it is made to the comptroller shall be published in a newspaper published in the place where such association is established, or if there is no newspaper in the place, then in the one published nearest thereto in the same county, at the expense of the association; and such proof of publication shall be furnished as may be required by the comptroller. The comptroller shall also have power to call for special reports from any particular association whenever in his judgment the same are necessary in order to a full and complete knowledge of its condition."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there appears to be no report accompanying this bill.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, the bill merely reduces the number of annual reports which are required of national banks from five to three.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I thought, but I was about to ask a question in order to ascertain whether the bill had any other purpose.

Mr. McLEAN. That is all the bill proposes to do. The comptroller may require as many special reports as he sees fit.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 5211 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

BRADLEY SYKES.

The bill (H. R. 540) for the relief of Bradley Sykes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $1,727 to Bradley Sykes for injuries sustained as the result of being struck by a Government-owned automobile in Chicago on June 28, 1920.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM R. BRADLEY.

The bill (S. 3791) for the relief of William R. Bradley, former acting collector of internal revenue for South Carolina, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to credit the account of William R. Bradley, former acting collector of internal revenue for South Carolina, with the sum of $100, that amount now being charged against him for the loss of one special stamp book of the value of $100.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTERMINATION OF BEAN BEETLES IN NEW MEXICO.

The bill (S. 3995) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to exterminate bean beetles in the State of New Mexico, and authorizing expenditures therefor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ROBERT EDGAR ZEIGLER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 107) for the relief of Robert Edgar Zeigler. It proposes to reimburse Capt. Robert Edgar Zeigler in the sum of $725 for personal property stolen from him while his household goods were in Government custody at United States Army General Hospital No. 20, Whipple Barracks, Ariz.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, that is a bill which should pass, and I hope the Senator from Utah will allow it to be considered.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not see that there is any liability on the part of the Government involved in this case.

Mr. LODGE. The claim involves only $725.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The liability on the part of the Government is practically acknowledged. The report of the Secretary of War states that while the War Department has no authority to pay it the claim ought to be paid.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not see that in the report.

Mr. TOWNSEND. There is a long report covering several pages. The claimant had a receipt for the goods which he placed in the custody of the department, and there is not any question about the blame being on the quartermaster for not properly keeping the goods. Nor is there any question about their value nor about their having been stolen. I hope, therefore, the Senator from Utah will not object to the consideration and passage of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not insist upon the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, is there not some question, may I ask the Senator from Michigan, in reference to the amount involved? In one statement on page 5 of the report it appears apparently that the total value of the property was $585.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 2 of the report Secretary Weeks states:

3. The War Department does not interpose any objections to a favorable consideration of the pending bill other than to state that, based upon the information of record in regard to the claim, the reimbursement proposed is excessive.

I do not think that the Government of the United States——

Mr. LODGE. Do not let us ruin the Government of the United States by paying $725.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not a question of ruining anything; it is a question of right.

Mr. LODGE. I also think it is a question of right.

Mr. FLETCHER. On page 9 of the report there is a statement which shows apparently that $725 was the original cost of the property.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Exactly, and it was worth more than that at the time it was stolen. The sum of $725 is what the goods cost abroad before they were shipped here; that amount represents the foreign price that was paid. The fact is they were worth more than that by appraisement, but there was only claimed the exact cost of the goods abroad.

Mr. SMOOT. The Government, then, runs all the risk of property being stolen when it is put in a Government storehouse.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the quartermaster had done his duty at that time the officers would have been assigned to quarters when they went there, but Mr. Zeigler had to put his goods in the custody of the quartermaster, who gave a receipt for them, Mr. Zeigler being assigned to service on the border when he might just as well have been assigned to quarters. The story of this chaplain is a long one; but it seems to me one which is entitled to belief, and it did impress the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. It appears by the report that the goods were bought in 1915, and here we find, in 1922, a claim that they were worth more after seven years of use than they were when they were originally bought.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But they were not used. In 1919, when Mr. Zeigler secured a receipt for the storage of the goods, they were not in use, and they have not been in his possession since, for they were stolen.

Mr. FLETCHER. I can not see how these articles could increase in value by age; for instance, portières, an electric iron, an electric radiator, two pairs of feather pillows, one lady's coat, carved wood, and lacquer trays, and so forth. It looks to me as if the committee have been too liberal in making the allowance as to the value of the property. On page 5, as I have stated, it seems to be listed at $585, although $725 is proposed to be paid by the bill.

I move, Mr. President, to amend the bill by striking out "$725" and in lieu thereof inserting "$585."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt, and will again put the question.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNIE M'COLGAN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, considered the bill (S. 1600) for the relief of Annie McColgan, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 11, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$7,500" and to insert "$5,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Annie McColgan, of Philadelphia, Pa., widow of Peter McColgan, who, while a civilian employee of the Ordnance Department, United States Army, in the discharge of his duties, and without fault or negligence, was killed by the explosion of fuses at the Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa., on February 5, 1903, the sum of $5,000, being the sum recommended to be paid her by the board of officers appointed to investigate said explosion by the commanding officer at Frankford Arsenal on February 6, 1903.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOPHIE CAFFREY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, considered the bill (S. 1511) for the relief of Sophie Caffrey, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment in line 11, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$5,000" and to insert "$2,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Sophie Caffrey, of Haverstraw, N. Y., dependent mother of Henry Sloat, who, while a civilian employee of the Navy, in the discharge of his duties and without his fault or negligence, was killed by the explosion of a shell charge at the United States naval magazine on Iona Island, in the Hudson River, N. Y., on December 5, 1906, the sum of $2,000.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I am, of course, anxious that the bill shall be passed, but I merely wish to point out to the Senate the inconsistency between the bill now pending and the one which has just been passed. In this case the Committee on Claims have recommended $2,000, while in the bill which has just been passed they allowed $5,000, although the two cases are on all fours.

Mr. SMOOT. In one case the payment is to the wife and in the other case to a dependent mother.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEW JERSEY SHIPBUILDING & DREDGING CO.

The bill (S. 3515) for the relief of the New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co., of Bayonne, N. J., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$205,028.28" and insert "$152,278.28," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $152,278.28 to the New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co., of Bayonne, N. J., in full settlement to reimburse said owner of drill boat No. 3 for loss sustained as a result of total destruction of said drill boat No. 3 through collision with the U. S. S. Lykens, in Hell Gate, off Halletts Point, New York Harbor, on September 1, 1921.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that in the report signed by the Acting Secretary of the Navy, Theodore Roosevelt, it is stated:

The finding of the naval board of investigation placing the responsibility for the collision on the U. S. S. Lykens is approved by the department, and while the claim of the New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co. for reimbursement for losses sustained is large, the records in the department fully sustain it. The item of $53,750 for loss of profits is one that has required most careful consideration. Strictly speaking, it is not a claim for demurrage. It arose because the wreck of the drill boat prevented the contractor from prosecuting its work under the contract with the War Department. It is not based on the loss of the boat or its earning capacity, but on the loss of the earnings of the entire dredging plant, for the period it was required to remain idle due to the wreck.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator will find that that sum was stricken from the bill.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will permit me, it is to meet that objection that this amendment is proposed. The amendment takes out of the bill all consideration of the earnings of the company from the time of the wreck until the expiration of their contract; and the amount fixed in the bill is the amount of damages actually sustained, as proven by their statements of cost and proved value of the property destroyed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, this is a bill involving a very large sum. I scarcely think we ought to pass on it without a chance to examine some of the details of the matter. The report is rather voluminous, and it would take some little time to read it; but it seems to me that if these people have a claim, if a vessel of the United States caused damage to them, they have their remedy. They ought to have brought suit and had this question passed upon by the court.

In these admiralty cases the courts have jurisdiction to consider the negligence of both sides and to apportion the loss; and it may be that if the matter had been thrashed out in the courts a very different amount than that specified in this bill would have been arrived at. It seems to me it is a mistake to legislate in this way.

Mr. DIAL. Let the bill go over.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not ask that the bill go over. This matter was carefully inquired into by a commission appointed by the Secretary of the Navy.

The Navy Department, in fact, recommended the appropriation of the whole sum. The committee, in their judgment, have stricken out the profit this company would have made if they had been operating the ship.

It appears that the Government entered into a contract to have certain dredging done in the East River, at Hell Gate, and that a vessel going through the Gate collided with the vessel owned by this contractor and sank it. The Navy Department admit that it was their fault. There is no question about it. They have carefully examined into all the facts. The Committee on Claims have examined all the facts submitted by the Navy Department. The case is on all fours with hundreds we pass here. There is no other course to pursue.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there a request that the bill go over?

Mr. DIAL. Let it go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE STATION, HOFFMANS ISLAND, N. Y.

The bill (S. 3923) for the relief of the State of New York, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the State of New York the sum of $55,917.68, being the amount expended by the said State of New York for the construction of a delousing station on Hoffmans Island, New York Harbor, which was thereafter transferred to the Public Health Service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRADE PERCENTAGES OF ENLISTED MEN.

The bill (S. 4037) to amend the grade percentages of enlisted men as prescribed in section 4b of the national defense act, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have no objection to that bill, but I did not know that it was on the calendar. I have on my desk a letter which deals with some proposition, and I am not sure but that it may be involved in this measure; so I should like to have the bill go over until to-morrow. I will look at the letter in the meantime, and I am satisfied that I shall be ready to have the bill taken up to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over. This completes the call of the calendar.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS.

Mr. NEW and Mr. UNDERWOOD addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, while the calendar was being called I understood that the bill that I referred to at that time was passed over without prejudice, by which I understand that it would come back on the calendar now that it is finished. It is Senate bill 2228 and was passed over so that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] might offer his amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognized the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama evidently misunderstood. I was about to say that under the understanding announced by the Chair at the time Senate bill 1452 was passed over by agreement, I think it would come up for consideration at this time. It was announced that it would be passed over until the reading of the calendar had been completed.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. NEW. I do.

Mr. SHIELDS. I should like to inquire what was done with the bill that was called up by the Senator from Alabama?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama misunderstood. The Chair recognized the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that if that bill is called up I shall object to its consideration to-day.

Mr. SHIELDS. When the bill was reached on the calendar some time ago, it was passed over on account of my absence from the Chamber. I am perfectly willing to have it taken up if the Senator wishes to take it up right now.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I shall object to its consideration to-day.

Mr. SHIELDS. In other words, I want it understood that I am not delaying the passage of the bill. Really, I am anxious to take it up on account of an amendment I desire to offer to it.

Mr. NEW. I have no possible objection to the consideration of the bill to which the Senator from Tennessee refers; but I think he is under a misapprehension, and that Senate bill 1452 is the one that is now before the Senate, under the agreement announced by the Chair when it was passed on the call of the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate bill 1452 is before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the reason why I made the statement I did was because of the fact that the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge was not present; and not only that, but I do not want it considered to-day either. Therefore, I shall object to Senate bill 2228 when it comes up, if it comes up again.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1452) for establishing shooting grounds for the public, for establishing game refuges and breeding grounds, for protecting migratory birds, and requiring a Federal license to hunt them.

The READING CLERK. The pending amendment was offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM], to add at the end of section 15:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt any person from complying with the provisions of the laws of the several States for hunting or shooting migratory birds.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that is the same amendment as proposed by myself. It is the amendment introduced by me and ordered favorably reported by the Military Affairs Committee, and I ask that that amendment be agreed to. Will the Senator from Indiana accept it?

Mr. NEW. In so far as I can agree to it, I do so gladly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I do not understand the parliamentary situation of that bill. Has the bill been taken up?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was taken up and temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SHIELDS. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Did I understand that objection was made to the consideration of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection was made by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. NEW. Then I feel that I must move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1452.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I desire to look into that bill. We have had so many of these regulations—regulating everything that a man does on his farm or anywhere else in the country in relation to game birds and those that are not game birds—that I think we have gone about far enough. The country is tired of legislation in favor of a few sportsmen. I think that matter ought to be seriously considered.

I suggest the absence of a quorum, in order that we may have a full expression of the sentiment of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Hale	McLean	Robinson
Brookhart	Harris	McNary	Sheppard
Broussard	Johnson	Myers	Shields
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Smoot
Capper	Kellogg	New	Spencer
Caraway	Kendrick	Nicholson	Sterling
Curtis	Keyes	Norbeck	Townsend
Dial	Ladd	Norris	Trammell
Dillingham	La Follette	Overman	Underwood
Ernst	Lenroot	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Fletcher	Lodge	Pepper	Warren
George	McCumber	Phipps
Glass	McKellar	Reed, Pa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Indiana to resume the consideration of Senate bill 1452, providing for establishing shooting grounds for the public, for establishing game refuges and breeding grounds, for protecting migratory birds, and requiring a Federal license to hunt them.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I have here a number of amendments which I want to offer after consultation with various Senators who have been interested in this bill. All the amendments were printed on September 11 and laid upon the desks of Senators. I would like to offer them serially.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana offers the amendments which he sends to the desk, and they will be stated in their order.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 5, after the word "person," insert the words "except as hereinafter provided."

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 6, at the end of section 2, strike out the period and insert a colon and the words:

Provided, That such license shall not be required to be procured by any person or by any member of his immediate family for the purpose of hunting, pursuing, shooting, capturing, or killing any such migratory bird on any farm land owned by such person and occupied by him as his place of permanent abode.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 13, at the end of section 3, strike out the period and insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt any person from complying with the provisions of laws of the several States for hunting or shooting migratory birds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 7, line 10, strike out the words "fish, wild animal, or" and insert in lieu thereof the word "migratory."

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 7, line 22, strike out the words "fish, wild animal, or wild" and insert in lieu thereof the word "migratory."

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. Add, after section 15, page 9, line 4, a new section, to be entitled "Sec. 15-A," to read as follows:

SEC. 15-A. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to call an annual conference for the consideration of matters relating to the conservation and increase of migratory birds, for which conference invitations shall be extended to the official game service of each State and to others interested, and at which the Department of Agriculture shall be represented.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. In section 11, page 6, line 19, strike out the period and insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided further, That all areas acquired under this act shall be subject to the laws of the State in which such areas are located, if such laws are not inconsistent with the provisions of the migratory bird treaty act, this act, or regulations adopted pursuant to the provisions of this act, or provide additional protection for migratory birds, their nests or eggs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 8, line 7, before the word "purpose," insert the word "unlawful."

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 13, strike out the period and insert a comma and the following words: "which rules and regulations shall be made a part of such license."

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 8, line 1, after the word "reserved," insert the words "where so set apart or reserved."

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 9, line 1, after the word "any," insert the words "rule or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. In section 16, page 9, in lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "on its passage and approval" and substitute therefor the words "when duly enacted."

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. Amend section 16, page 9, line 7, by striking out the words and figures "16th day of August, 1922," and inserting in lieu thereof the words and figures "1st day of February, 1923."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEW. That completes the list of amendments I have to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and still open to amendment.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, no one now knows what this bill provides. The Senator from Indiana called up the bill and then proceeded to offer a dozen or 15 amendments. None of them were explained, and not a Senator on the floor, not even the Senator from Indiana, could tell exactly what their effect would be. The bill is radically wrong. There is absolutely no defense for one provision in it.

Everyone who wants this particular bill passed will tell you that the licensing provision is the most important section in it. Yet the licensing provision has nothing to do with restricting the number of people who might, under this bill, become qualified to hunt. It does not give the commission any more power to regulate the conduct of the licensed hunter than the unlicensed hunter, but it is intended to promote a professional hunters' club, composed of men who will go to the trouble to get licenses; but any workingman, any farmer, who perhaps one day in the year wants to hunt and goes out to shoot game will discover that a Federal law requires him to go and get a Federal license before he may hunt. If there were some provision attached to the procuring of licenses, or some obligation resting upon the licensee which did not rest upon other people, there might be some people to urge that there should be a license fee.

I know, and everybody who stops to think knows, that a number of people finding a little time on their hands might hunt; but there is a very strong aversion upon the part of most people to taking out a Federal license to exercise a right they have felt was theirs by right of American citizenship. The result is that the intention is to exclude from the privilege of hunting a very large number of the American people and give an exclusive right to those people who pride themselves upon being hunters, who have their shooting clubs, and who will take out the licenses and go out and hunt. Under this bill they will be the only ones who will hunt. That is the purpose of the bill. The Senator from Indiana says that is the heart of the bill. It is the heart of it because it is expected to make game more plentiful for those people, and to exclude everybody else from hunting. A few people have written me about the bill.

I wish now to offer a motion to strike out, on page 2, line 1, the words "without first having procured the license herein provided," and if that amendment shall prevail, then amendments to sections 3, 4, and 5 will be offered in succession.

What I want to say about it is rather a reiteration. There is no excuse whatever for laying this additional burden upon the American people who sometimes exercise the American right of hunting, unless it is expected that it will limit the number of those who will hunt. In other words, unless it shall operate as the proponents of the measure hope it will—and I believe it will—to exclude a very large number of American citizens from exercising the right to hunt, it will have no application at all.

It is true that the license fee which is to be paid is to be used for leasing or buying certain hunting preserves and building within them cabins and things of that kind for the use of hunters; but that is only an afterthought. That will never be done. There is no expectation of its being done. The hope and the belief, which I think are well grounded, are that the majority of people are not going to take out Federal licenses, because the majority of people are thoroughly out of patience with Federal regulation. It has gotten so that you can not do anything without a Federal license. There is hardly a single act of citizenship which a man may now exercise except as a licensee. The American people are thoroughly tired of this everlasting thrusting of the Federal Government into every detail of their lives; and of all, this is the most idiotic exercise of Federal authority.

It is bad enough that the Secretary of Agriculture should say to the people living in my State, or any other State of this Union, "You shall hunt only within certain prescribed periods." I know, and most people who have had any experience with the regulations know, that the regulations in some States absolutely forbid any effective hunting. They make it possible to hunt migratory game in some States with some pleasure, but in most States, and my own State is one of them, they so prescribe the seasons that the open season is the period when the migratory birds are not there.

The closed seasons are those seasons when hunting could be indulged in. That was bad enough. It met the hearty condemnation of every American citizen everywhere except the professional reformers and the professional hunters, but this is intended to extend it just that much further to include a license fee. Not content with prescribing times and places where they might hunt, it is now proposed to say, "You have to go to your postmaster and take out a license, and then if you permit anybody else to pick up your license and go out with a gun, then you forfeit it and are subject to many other pains and penalties."

I sincerely hope, Mr. President, that there is enough of American spirit left in the Senate to defeat this sort of legislation. I realize there is less of it here than any place else on earth. Right here in the Senate there is less desire to protect the American people in their constitutional rights than anywhere else where an equal number of men are associated. It has gotten so that instead of trying to obey and uphold the Constitution and protect the rights of American citizens, the Senate devotes its entire energies to devising means whereby the Government may invade the rights of the people and make life less pleasant. This is another one of the things that has absolutely no excuse whatever for being thrust upon the people. I hope there is spirit enough left in the Senate to defeat the legislation.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, if anyone had read the bill as it is amended and had listened to what has just been said by the Senator from Arkansas they must have realized that he totally misapprehends the purpose and the effect of the bill. It not only does not do what he seems to fear it does, but it is the one promise we have against the happening of just exactly what he seems to fear.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. NEW. Will the Senator from Kansas wait just a moment?

Mr. CURTIS. I merely wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. NEW. I yield for a question.

Mr. CURTIS. In view of the fact that the bill is now the unfinished business and there is some objection on the other side of the Chamber that Senators have not had a chance to read the various amendments, and, as the Senator thinks the amendments do cover the point raised by the Senator from Arkansas, would it not be well to let us have an executive session and let the bill go over until to-morrow? It is the unfinished business and can be taken up to-morrow after morning business is closed.

Mr. NEW. That is just what I was going to suggest.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that is a very good suggestion. I was just about to make it myself. We do not know what is in the bill.

Mr. NEW. That is the suggestion I was going to make of my own motion, so we are agreed on one point at any rate. If the bill goes over as the unfinished business the amendments can be printed and it then comes up, as I understand it, at the close of the morning hour to-morrow. With that understanding I am willing that it shall go over.

But I wish to add a word before I resume my seat. It is true that a Federal license is to be issued under the provisions of the bill. The cost of that license would be $1. It must be taken out by every man who wants to shoot migratory birds. The measure is meant to be supplemental to the migratory birds treaty which was entered into between the Government of the United States and the Canadian Government and which is now in force. Ever cent of the dollar that is to be paid for a license would go for the benefit of the poor man who has not the means of belonging to a club. We can not stop the shooting indulged in by the man who belongs to a club, but the man who belongs to a club can prevent anybody other than a member of the club from coming on that property. Not only that but they will do it, and if necessary will do it at the point of a gun. I have seen men shot for coming on private hunting grounds.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. It surely is not the contention of the Senator from Indiana that I could take out a license under the terms of this measure and hunt on his land whether he was willing for me to do so or not?

Mr. NEW. Certainly not. The Senator could not go on private preserves——

Mr. CARAWAY. I could not do it under the terms of this bill.

Mr. NEW. Certainly not; but those are lands that have already been taken over by the clubs. There are still in the country certain marsh areas of not inconsiderable size that have not been taken over by the clubs, but every acre of which will be taken by them unless some measure of this kind is enacted into law to prevent it.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is there anything in the bill to prevent a club from taking over such lands?

Mr. NEW. Only the provision that the Government is empowered to take up the land, and if the Government does so the club man can not.

Mr. CARAWAY. And the private individual could not do it without the provisions of this measure?

Mr. NEW. Certainly they could.

Mr. CARAWAY. A private individual could take up Government lands?

Mr. NEW. No; but the private individual could buy the land and establish clubs. The object of the bill is to permit the Government to take these lands that are still unoccupied and maintain them as public shooting grounds upon which the Senator can go as well as I.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; it would not be me.

Mr. NEW. Evidently not.

Mr. CARAWAY. It would be the Senator from Indiana. The license has nothing to do with that. The license undertakes to prevent a man from hunting anywhere, except the very generous offer a moment ago for the exclusive use of the owner and his family. That would not even permit a man to hunt on such lands.

Mr. NEW. Certainly any man holding a license could hunt on any of the grounds that may be taken over under the operation of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. The measure does not give the Government any power it does not now have. The license is the only feature in the bill that is intended to exclude certain people from hunting.

Mr. NEW. No; it is not. It is the only feature of the bill which will establish the grounds upon which any man without the means to enjoy club membership may go hunting.

Mr. President, certainly further discussion of the points of difference between the Senator from Arkansas and myself is not going to expedite anything, so with the understanding that the bill goes over as the unfinished business and will be printed with the amendments I have nothing further to say at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE BUDGET.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying Budget statements, referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith the Budget of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, which is summarized in the following statement:

Budget summary.

[Exclusive of postal revenues and postal expenditures paid from postal revenues.]

	Estimated, 1924.	Estimated, 1923.	Actual, 1922.
Total receipts	$3,361,812,359	$3,429,862,959	$4,109,104,150.94
Total expenditures (including reduction of the public debt required by law to be made from ordinary receipts)	3,180,843,234	3,703,801,671	3,795,302,499.84
Excess of expenditures		273,938,712
Excess of receipts	180,969,125		313,801,651.10

In the Budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, transmitted to Congress December 5, 1921, the estimated receipts for the fiscal year 1922 were $3,943,453,663, and the estimated expenditures $3,967,922,366, thus forecasting an apparent excess of expenditures over receipts of $24,468,703. At the close of business on June 30, 1922, it was found that the actual receipts for the fiscal year 1922 were $4,109,104,150.94 and the actual expenditures $3,795,302,499.84, making an excess of receipts over expenditures of $313,801,651.10. That we closed the fiscal year 1922 with a surplus of $313,801,651.10 instead of an estimated deficit of $24,468,703 was due in no small measure to the fact that at the beginning of the fiscal year 1922 a system of financial control was established in the executive branch of the Government under the Budget system. Immediately upon the commencement of the fiscal year 1922 Executive pressure for the closest economies was brought to bear upon the business organization of the Government. For the first time in the history of this country coordination was established in the routine business of the Government and the departments and establishments thus brought together in a common effort for economy.

While the estimate of receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year 1923 as made at the time of the presentation of the Budget in December, 1921, indicated that the receipts would be $3,338,182,750 and the expenditures $3,505,754,727, a revision of the prospective receipts and expenditures made on July 1, 1922, the commencement of the fiscal year, indicated that the receipts would be $3,073,825,311 and the expenditures $3,771,258,542. That revised estimate indicated an excess of expenditures over receipts of $697,433,231.

As a result, however, of the operations of the first five months of the current fiscal year, a revised estimate of receipts has now been made showing a total of $3,429,862,959. The considerable increase over the July estimate is due to the stimulation in the collection of ordinary receipts aided by an increase in the customs revenues. On the other hand, due to continued pressure for economies and a revision of the expenditure program based on five months of actual operation, it is now estimated that the expenditures for the fiscal year 1923 will be $3,703,801,671. These revised figures indicate an apparent prospective deficit of $273,938,712. I am hopeful, however, that the conditions on which this estimate is predicated will change for the better in the ensuing months of the fiscal year and that the close of the year will show a balanced account.

It is well to mention that of the total estimated expenditures of $3,703,801,671 for the fiscal year 1923, approximately $2,000,000,000 will be expended in the payment of pensions, payments to or on behalf of World War veterans, interest on the public debt, and for the reduction of the public debt required by law to be made from ordinary receipts.

This estimate of expenditures during the fiscal year 1923 includes the amount of the difference between the cash receipts from sales of war savings stamps, series of 1918, and their face value, which series becomes due January 1, 1923. This amount of approximately $125,000,000 represents discount accruals covering a period of five years, and while not an expenditure properly chargeable against the ordinary receipts of 1923 must be met this fiscal year, and therefore has been included in this year's estimated expenditures.

We now come to the Budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924. It is estimated that the total ordinary receipts from all sources, excluding the Postal Service, will be $3,361,812,359. This is $747,291,791.94 less than the actual receipts for 1922 and $68,050,600 less than the estimated receipts for 1923. The items which make up this estimated total for 1924 are compared with similar items for the two preceding years, as follows:

Receipts.

Source.	1924	1923	1922
Internal-revenue receipts	$2,425,000,000	$2,400,000,000	$3,213,253,253.79
Customs receipts	425,000,000	450,000,000	356,443,387.18
Miscellaneous receipts:
Interest, premium, and discount	272,865,283	237,800,455	57,400,287.03
Sale of Government properties	35,404,410	96,850,125	116,287,787.86
Public domain receipts	16,149,650	16,214,600	16,334,595.64
Franchise tax, Federal reserve banks	10,000,000	10,000,000	59,974,495.64
Profits on coinage, bullion deposits, etc	10,000,000	17,000,000	21,603,921.07
Fees, fines, and forfeitures	35,000,642	31,295,267	32,539,339.35
Repayments of foreign loans and other investments	50,175,000	58,645,000	120,658,720.93
District of Columbia receipts	15,500,500	16,363,415	15,235,016.44
Panama Canal receipts	14,224,000	13,924,000	11,747,092.47
Trust fund receipts	65,319,170	61,195,522	57,900,581.32
Other sources	20,169,715	21,500,485	29,589,693.22
Total miscellaneous receipts	511,812,359	579,862,959	539,407,503.97
Total receipts, all sources	3,361,812,359	3,429,862,959	4,109,104,150.94

The estimate of expenditures for the fiscal year 1924 is $3,180,843,234. This is the amount which it is estimated will be withdrawn from the Treasury during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924. This estimate of cash withdrawal is to be distinguished from the estimate of appropriations contained in the Budget, since withdrawals during the fiscal year will be made from appropriations heretofore made as well as from appropriations recommended in this Budget. Furthermore, a portion of the money to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1924 will not be withdrawn from the Treasury until after the close of that fiscal year.

These expenditures may be divided into two general classes, those which partake of the nature of fixed charges and are not generally subject to administrative control, and those which are subject to administrative control.

Included within the first class are pensions, payments to or on behalf of World War veterans, interest on the public debt, and the reduction of the public debt required by law to be made from the ordinary receipts of the Government. These items, together with certain other, but smaller, items not generally subject to administrative control, represent about two-thirds of the estimated expenditures, leaving approximately $1,000,000,000 subject to administrative control.

The foregoing does not include expenditures for the Postal Service and the Post Office Department payable from postal revenues. Such expenditures for the fiscal year 1922 were $545,666,532.28, a deficiency of $64,346,234.52, payable from ordinary receipts, being included in the ordinary expenditures for 1922 hereinbefore mentioned. The estimated expenditures from postal revenues during 1923 are $559,996,841.60, an estimated deficiency of $31,502,570.76 being included in the estimated ordinary expenditures for 1923. The estimated expenditures from postal revenues for 1924 are $584,653,151.50, and it is estimated that through proper readjustments there will be a surplus of postal revenues over expenditures amounting to $952,430.56 for that year.

That we approach the commencement of the fiscal year 1924 with an estimated surplus for that year of $180,969,125 is certainly most encouraging. While I am hopeful that there will be no deficit in the current fiscal year, 1923, if such a deficit does occur this surplus for 1924 will give a margin to take care of it.

Successful management of the public debt in the transactions involving large refunding operations is essential to the public credit and closely related to successful Budget operations. The Treasury Department has been carrying out a program of orderly funding and gradual liquidation of the public debt. On June 30, 1922, the gross public debt was $22,963,381,708.31, as compared with $23,977,450,552.54 on June 30, 1921, showing a reduction of $1,014,068,844.23 during the fiscal year 1922. This reduction was accomplished through the following means: First, in the amount of $422,694,600, through the cumulative sinking fund and other public debt expenditures payable from certain specific receipts; second, in the amount of $277,572,503.13, through the reduction in the net balance in the general fund of the Treasury; and third, in the amount of $313,801,651.10, through the surplus of ordinary receipts over expenditures for the year.

On April 30, 1921, the short-term outstanding debt maturing before June 30, 1923, was more than $7,500,000,000, which through the reductions referred to and refunding operations was reduced to about $4,500,000,000 on June 30, 1922, and up to November 15, 1922, this amount had been further reduced to approximately $3,000,000,000. These refunding operations have involved the issue on October 16, 1922, of approximately $750,000,000 long-term bonds and the issue of Treasury notes aggregating $2,743,334,000 maturing as follows: $701,897,700 during 1924, $936,727,700 during 1925, and $1,104,708,600 during 1926. These refunding operations are carried on for the purpose of changing the maturity date of public debt obligations and thus to avoid the necessity for meeting obligations of many billions of dollars at one time. The resulting distribution of maturities does not indicate a reduction in the total of such obligations.

We now come to the estimates of appropriations for 1924, amounting to $3,078,940,331.60. This is $195,298,359.14 less than the appropriations already made for the current fiscal year, 1923. Early in July I called together in open meeting for the third time the executives constituting the business establishment of the Government and at that time further emphasized the need of more rigid economy in the expenditure of public funds. I stated that the estimated receipts for the fiscal year 1924 would not permit so liberal appropriations for that year as had been made for the current fiscal year, 1923. The preparation of the estimates of appropriations as they appear in the Budget was controlled by this policy. While it may be possible to make a small reduction in an item here and there, any material reduction will necessitate a change in the administrative policy upon which estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1924 are based. I am giving below a comparative statement of the estimates of appropriations for 1924 and appropriations for 1923.

Statement No. 8 of the Budget gives a functional classification of the estimates for the fiscal year 1924, which will be found interesting and informative, showing as it does the approximate amounts devoted to important Government activities and interests. This classification has four general divisions—general functions, military functions, civil functions, and a grouping of the nonfunctional appropriations.

It will be found that a total of $103,070,886 is carried for general functions, which include the legislative, judicial, executive, and the general administrative operations of the Government which can not be allocated to specific civil functions.

The sum of $1,256,715,939 is provided for military functions, which include military pensions, retirement pay, annuities and World War allowances, and national defense.

The amount recommended for national defense is divided into two classes: Army, $256,552,887; Navy, $289,880,993.

The amount recommended for the maintenance and operation of the Army will provide for a Regular Army of 12,000 officers and 125,000 enlisted men, exclusive of the Philippine Scouts, which is the force now authorized by Congress; will provide for the training of 15,000 reserve officers for a period of 15 days and for 150 for a period of three months, as against a total of only 5,000 for 15 days during the current fiscal year; will provide for the attendance of 38,000 men at civilian military training camps as against 27,000 during this current fiscal year; and will enable the Militia Bureau to increase the strength of the National Guard from 160,000 officers and men—the strength on June 30, 1922—to 215,000 officers and men. While no increase in the number of students enrolled at Reserve Officers' Training Corps units at schools and colleges—now totaling 96,000 students in 225 institutions—is provided, the funds recommended, however, will enable a larger number of these students to be given both basic and advanced courses of instruction.

The funds recommended will provide for all essentials connected with the upkeep of all military posts, camps, and stations, the Army transport service, the coast defenses of the United States, Panama and insular possessions, and other military activities, and, in addition, allow $3,166,767 for new construction at military posts and $750,000 toward the replacement of worn-out portions of the Alaska cable. For the Air Service the amount recommended is $12,871,500, which is $23,500 less than the 1923 appropriation, and will permit this service to operate efficiently in accordance with existing policy. For the United States Military Academy at West Point $2,066,428 is recommended, an increase of $6,799 over 1923.

The amount recommended for the Navy will provide for the present enlisted personnel of 86,000 men; will maintain all present ships in commission; will increase the steaming radius of capital ships from 13,080 miles to 16,200 miles, and other ships proportionately; will provide training for 2,000 officers and 7,000 men in the Naval Reserve; and will make provision for continuing all new ship construction in privately owned yards, except for reduction in speed of construction on three light cruisers; for suspending the construction of four auxiliaries in navy yards and reducing the speed of construction on two fleet submarines.

The amount provided in the Budget for military pensions and allowances includes $253,000,000 for pensions, $434,584,050 for World War allowances, and $20,389,289 for retirement pay.

The amount recommended for civil functions totals $953,599,096. Under this general function $14,587,167 is allowed for foreign relations and protection of American interests abroad; $18,553,686 for general law enforcement, which includes activities having to do with the enforcement of general laws and the administration and enforcement of special acts like the national prohibition act, the narcotic act, and the investigation and prosecution of war-contract frauds; $7,199,000 for the control of currency and banking; $12,584,305 for the administration of Indian affairs; $17,582,018 for the administration of public domain, which includes those activities of the Government having to do with the care and utilization of public lands and the care and utilization of national forests; $11,391,909 for the promotion and regulation of commerce and industry, which includes the activities of the Tariff Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, the Patent Office, and those activities of the Departments of Agriculture and Commerce having to do with the promotion and regulation of commerce and industry; $79,491,995 for the promotion, regulation, and operation of marine transportation, which includes $50,411,500 for the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation; $4,514,900 for the promotion and regulation of land transportation; $590,171,942 for the Postal Service and land telegraph and telegraphic communication, which includes $590,166,192 for the Postal Service; $24,876,799 for the promotion and regulation of agriculture; $1,244,090 for the promotion and regulation of fisheries; $4,718,030 for the promotion of labor interests; $3,871,210 for immigration and naturalization; $15,877,339 for promotion of public health; $10,151,060 for promotion of public education; $10,619,456 for science and research; $29,563,110 for local government, including the District of Columbia; and $228,050 for civil relief.

For public works, under civil functions, $96,197,030 is carried, which includes $41,764,550 for rivers and harbors proper and items of similar character; $31,480,000 for roads; $6,889,105 for Panama Canal; $4,750,000 for Reclamation Service; $2,200,000 for railroads in Alaska; $5,728,950 for hospital construction and facilities for war patients, and $3,384,425 for other public improvements and Government plant additions.

Under nonfunctional appropriations is carried a total of $1,355,720,602, which includes $36,187,059 for refunds, losses, contingencies, and miscellaneous; $345,097,000 for public-debt retirements payable from ordinary receipts; $950,000,000 for interest on the public debt, and $24,436,543 for disbursement of trust funds.

It seems appropriate here to consider the course of the retrenchment policy of the Government since the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the year in which the armistice was signed. Exclusive of expenditures made in the reduction of the public debt, the total expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, were $6,403,343,841.21. The expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, including $422,281,500 on account of reduction of the public debt payable from ordinary receipts, under the new cumulative sinking fund, were $5,538,209,189.30. This was further reduced for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, to $3,795,302,499.84. As I have previously stated, the estimated expenditures for 1923 are $3,703,801,671, while the Budget for 1924 estimates the expenditures at $3,180,843,234 for that year. These figures show a most satisfactory reduction in the expenditure of public moneys since 1919.

Can there be a reasonable expectation for further considerable reduction in governmental expenditures in the near future? This question is no doubt upon the lips of many. The burden of taxation caused by the World War has borne heavily upon us all, and it has been the earnest desire of the Government to reduce this burden to the minimum consistent with a proper functioning of the Federal services. We have seen, however, that approximately two-thirds of the taxes collected go to pay certain fixed charges, over the expenditure of which there can be exercised little or no administrative control. The interest on the public debt, the chief of the fixed charges, must be paid. This will be $950,000,000 for the fiscal year 1924, constituting nearly one-third of the total expenditures of the Government. Among these are also certain permanent and indefinite appropriations for various purposes and certain large annual appropriations sanctioned by law and by public opinion.

After deducting these items there is left, as has been shown, approximately only $1,000,000,000, out of which these normal operating expenses of the Government must be paid. It is against this group of expenditures that the retrenchment policy of the Government has been directed. Never before in our financial history has there been such close scrutiny on the part of both the Executive and the Congress of every item which contemplates expenditures for the support of the Government. Not only have the departments themselves set up agencies of control both in the preparation of their estimates and over their expenditures but the pressure of the Executive has been directed toward effecting economies in these ordinary governmental operations.

A reduction in expenditures would undoubtedly result from a reorganization of the departments and establishments upon a more scientific basis, but we can not look to this alone to effect such a material reduction in cost of Government operation as would justify the expression of hope for a considerable lessening of expenditures in the years to come.

There is, however, another field of Government operation—a rapidly broadening field of Government expenditure—which may be discussed with profit to us all. I refer to expenditures which are being made from appropriations for Federal aid in lines of research, improvement, and development which, while having no direct connection with the operations of the business of government, have grown to become a recognized part of its activities. It is not easy, therefore, to divorce from our minds the fact that considerable of the moneys appropriated for the Government are spent for those things which do not pertain to the normal functions or operations of the business of government. There is question as to how far the Government should participate in these extraneous activities, and I am frank to say that an answer to the question as to whether we can look forward to any further material reduction in the expenditures of the Government in future years depends largely upon whether or not there will be a curtailment or expansion of these activities, which have already added greatly to the annual drafts upon the Treasury of the United States. These extraneous activities have flowed from the laws enacted pursuant to popular demand, and I take this occasion to refer to them for the purpose of showing that the taxation which necessarily results in providing funds to meet them is a necessary incident to the fulfillment of the popular demand.

In the efforts which have been directed to reducing public expenditures I have been much concerned in apparent increasing State, county, and municipal indebtedness, and I am fearful lest this condition may be in part attributable to the expenditures made by the Government pursuant to its Federal aid laws, as many of these laws require State contributions as a prerequisite to the extension of the Federal aid. Certainly an expression by the Government that it is willing to bear a proportionate part of the cost of certain aid work is an incentive to the States to contribute their share, and it is only natural that this should lead to the increasing State, county, and municipal indebtedness.

In adapting its procedure to the needs of the new Budget system, I fully realize the far-reaching changes which Congress made in its organization. While the Budget bill was pending the House, in anticipation of its final enactment, changed its rules in order to centralize authority and responsibility over appropriation measures; and, further, when the President last year transmitted the Budget, prepared according to the form and contents of the old Book of Estimates, and an alternative budget, prepared according to a logical grouping of governmental services, the House forthwith adopted the alternative budget and changed the form of the appropriation bills to conform to the chapters of such alternative budget. This was a change of far-reaching importance. Following the action of the House, the Senate reorganized its committee system for the consideration of appropriation bills, centralizing authority and responsibility in its Committee on Appropriations.

The President has received from Congress during this formative period of the Budget system the most hearty cooperation at all times. Many conferences with the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate were necessary in order to establish the form of the Budget. We were working in virgin soil, establishing new methods of financial procedure. I am glad to say that no important step has been taken by the Executive, even though the matter involved might be of purely executive concern, without first discussing the matter with your Appropriations Committees, and I desire to express my appreciation of the helpful spirit always evidenced by them whenever we had occasion to come together for the mutual consideration of questions of budgetary principle or procedure. I may say without fear of exaggeration that we have been during the past two years colaborers in the greatest reform in our financial history.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 5, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, whose all-searching eye is upon us, we are grateful that Thy blessings are so freely bestowed. There is no price set upon the promise of to-day or the hope of to-morrow. The supply of the Father's care is boundless for us and for all mankind. In all our ways may there be unity, harmony, and conformity to Thy holy will. Upon us to-day do Thou bestow Thy blessing, which is the essence of the highest and the finest in the universe, namely, the presence of Thy Spirit. In our national life may evil elements be subdued and the good elements made more perfect for citizenship. Bless all citizens with robust intelligence and with a healthy patriotic spirit, so shall they be led to reaffirm and reassert righteous law, authority, and the Constitution of the Republic. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to address the House for, say, five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we had expected to be able to take up the first of the appropriation bills this morning, but circumstances over which we have no control makes that impossible; and in that event we had thought of taking up a contested-election case from the seventh Virginia district, but it is impossible in the time allowed to give due and proper notice of that matter to the parties interested, so that that measure will not be taken up to-day. In this situation it was suggested that we take up under a rule granted some time ago the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5823) known as the migratory bird bill, but those interested in that legislation have concluded that it was perhaps not wise to bring it up this morning.

That leaves us, Mr. Speaker, without any business which I think we could properly bring up to-day, and under those circumstances I think it will be necessary for the House to adjourn.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman from Wyoming might state what the circumstances are that would prevent the consideration of a conservative measure like the game refuge bill.

Mr. MONDELL. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection to having that bill considered to-day. I am trying to meet the views of those who I understood were interested in the measure. I am perfectly willing to take the bill up. I think this is just as good a time to have it laid on the table, or the enacting clause stricken out, as any other.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that I think quite a lot of the Members of the House would be willing to go to the mat with the gentleman on that proposition and see whether you will be able to do that. We are willing to try it. I do not believe the gentleman has the power to do it, even if he is the leader of the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, so far as the gentleman from Wyoming is concerned, he is perfectly willing to have that brought up to-day.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Wyoming if he would mind telling us why he does that?

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw that motion.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to have an extension until Monday next of the time in which I may file my speech on the merchant marine bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend until Monday next the time allowed him for the extension of his remarks on the merchant marine bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks on the merchant marine bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD his remarks on the merchant marine bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, the present bill, commonly known as the administration's ship subsidy bill, and denominated in the act as the "merchant marine act, 1922," certainly carries out the policy of the Republican Party in the development, maintenance, and fostering of monopolies. In this act the steamship companies are preferred in every provision of the bill. They are preferred, and so expressed in the bill, as to sale of vessels, exemption as to both income and property tax as vessel owners, compensation to shipowners, and loans. Heretofore the majority party in Congress favored the special interests by opening the doors of the Treasury to the railroads under the Esch-Cummins railroad bill. The steamship companies, under the present act, receive a bonus from the Government more liberal, in many respects, if possible, than that heretofore awarded the railroads under the Esch-Cummins bill. In order, however, that they may both enjoy together the fruits of the bonus and compensation system, heretofore applied in name only to ex-service men, the present bill creates a joint board, an interrelations board under the joint control of the Shipping Board and the Railroad Commission. The Shipping Board and the Railroad Commission exercise unlimited authority in the control and operation of the great arteries of trade, by both water and land, in the United States and upon the high seas. They fix the rates, regulate the control, and govern with arbitrary power all the facilities of commerce. Let us now proceed with an analysis and consideration of the provisions of the present bill.

The first power conferred on the board under the act authorizes and directs an immediate disposition of all vessels belonging to the United States Government, composing that remnant of the American-owned merchant marine, and the immediate transfer of such vessels to the steamship companies.

Under section 1 the board is authorized and directed to sell, as soon as practicable, all the vessels referred to in section 4 of this act or otherwise acquired by the board, viz:

Any vessel either constructed or in the process of construction belonging to the United States.

The significance of this law is the departure of the last vessel of the American-owned merchant marine from the ports of the American people to the ports of the steamship companies. Any vessel may be sold without advertisement, without competitive sale, privately and to any "person," which under the bill signifies a corporation or association, and at any price agreeable to the board—

Sub. (b) SECTION 1. Any sale under this section shall be made at such prices and on such terms and conditions, including the use or disposition of the vessel by the purchaser, as the board may prescribe.

Such, in brief, is a part of the arbitrary power conferred on the Shipping Board. The only proviso in this instance governing the sale of such vessels and which, indeed, is very violent I must confess, is that the purchaser has only 15 years in which to pay the purchase price, together with 4 per cent per annum which likewise shall be deferred for a period of 15 years.

You will discern also a marked discrimination in the disposition of such vessels. The bill specifically provides that the board shall not for a period of two years after the enactment of the merchant marine act, 1922, sell such vessels to persons other than those who have the support, financial and otherwise, of the domestic communities primarily interested in such lines. What lines are referred to and who are the "persons" named in the bill?

The "persons" are the steamship companies and the lines are steamship lines owned and controlled by steamship companies.

The domestic communities primarily interested in such lines are defined in section 2 of the bill, as follows:

Shall be understood to mean the geographical divisions of the coasts of the United States known as the North Atlantic, South Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific, and the territorial regions and zones naturally tributary to such coastal divisions.

The board is directed in the development of its sales policy to continue as far as practicable all existing steamship lines and regular services and to endeavor in every way to bring about the permanent establishment of such routes and lines, to maintain the services, and to retain such lines and routes.

LOAN FUND.

Under the bill there is established in the Treasury a revolving fund to be known as the "United States Shipping Board construction fund." There shall be covered into the loan fund all moneys which at the time of the enactment of the merchant marine act, 1922, are in the fund created by this section—section 5 amends section 11, act 1920, to so read—as in force before its amendment by such act; and the board may set aside and cover into the fund all receipts of the board, except appropriations made by law and profits of the board from the operations of the vessels; the total amount of money covered into the loan shall not exceed $125,000,000. The board may use the loan fund to such extent as it deems necessary for making loans to aid "persons" (1) in the construction by them of vessels of the best and most efficient type, equipped with the most efficient and the most economical machinery and commercial appliances, or (2) in the equipping by them of vessels already built with such machinery and commercial appliances. No loan shall be made for a longer period of time than 15 years. The interest on said loans shall not be less than 2 per cent per annum.

INCOME TAX AND PROPERTY TAX EXEMPTIONS TO OWNERS OF VESSELS.

The owner of a vessel of 1,500 gross tons or more registered, or enrolled and licensed, under the laws of the United States shall, for the taxable year 1921 and for each of the eight taxable years following, be allowed as a reduction in computing net income, in addition to other deductions allowed by law, an amount which bears the same ratio to his net income during the taxable year attributable to the operations of such vessel as his gross income attributable to the foreign operations of such vessel bears to his entire gross income attributable to the operations of such vessel. Tax deductions shall be allowed the owner as follows:

(1) The amount invested by the taxpayer, after the beginning of the taxable year for which the deduction is claimed and prior to the time fixed by law for filing the return, in the building in private shipyards in the United States of new vessels of a kind approved by the board, to be registered, or enrolled and licensed, under the laws of the United States; and (2) the amount set aside by the taxpayer after the beginning of the taxable year for which the deduction is claimed and prior to the time fixed by law for filing the return, in a trust fund for investment in the building in private shipyards in the United States of new vessels of the type and kind approved by the board, to be registered, or enrolled and licensed, under the laws of the United States. If the owner of the vessel uses it in whole or in part for the transportation of his own property his gross income attributable to the operations of the vessel in transporting such property shall be considered to be such amount as is determined by the board and certified by it to the commissioner as representing the fair value of the service performed by the vessel in transporting such property.

In the case of the sale during the taxable year 1921 or any of the eight taxable years following of a vessel launched prior to January 1, 1914, which was at the time of the enactment of the merchant marine act, 1922, registered, enrolled, or licensed under the laws of the United States, and which was at no time thereafter up to the time of the sale under a foreign registry or flag, the taxable gain derived from the sale shall be allowed as a deduction in computing the net income to the owner. All credits on income tax allowed the owner of vessels under this act may be originally claimed by him in his return by simply attaching thereto a copy of the certificate of the Shipping Board.

GOVERNMENT COMPENSATION TO OWNERS OF VESSELS AS INCOME.

The board is authorized and directed, on behalf of the United States, to enter into a contract with any "person" who is the owner of a vessel for the payment of compensation in respect to such vessel. The board shall not refuse to enter into a contract for compensation to such person on the ground that he is not qualified unless such refusal is specifically authorized by an affirmative vote of not less than five members of the board. Such contract shall be made for a period not exceeding 10 years, and the payment of compensation shall be made at regular intervals, at least every six months. Whenever the board deems it necessary to do so the rate of compensation may be increased, provided the increase be not more than double the amount being paid. The rules and regulations governing the amount of compensation are set forth in section 404 of the bill.

IMMIGRATION.

Section 301 provides that at least one-half of the total number of immigrants to the United States shall be transported by such vessels and steamship lines as designated in the bill. And to guarantee same the Commissioner General of Immigration is directed to promulgate such rules and regulations as will carry into effect such provision. There is no greater menace to-day to American institutions, to American ideals, than the open-door policy in respect to foreign immigration. The indiscriminate importation of foreign immigrants into the United States would overrun our country with undesirables, criminal aliens, anarchists, communists, and reds—the sure breeders of discontent, lawlessness, and riot. It has ever been the policy of steamship companies to engage in the traffic of transporting immigrants to the United States. It has ever been the pronounced policy of the big manufacturing interests of this country to encourage, to foster, and to promote such immigration, their purpose being to obtain cheap labor and to break down the honest wage of the American laboring man. The present immigration laws are far too lax and the enforcement thereof is not as strict and effective as it should be.

Under the present bill you rather encourage the importation of aliens and hold out to the favored steamship lines a guaranty that they shall engage in the traffic with profit to themselves, and you back up your guaranty with such rules and regulations as to compel at least 50 per cent of the immigrants to take passage on such vessels. Special cable of recent date, published in the press, carries announcement that Europe desires and expects the United States to so amend, revise, and alter its present immigration laws as to admit 1,100,000 refugees into the United States. In accordance with the plan of Dr. Fridtjof Nansen, a tremendous mass of the civil population in Constantinople, Anatolia, and western Thrace will forcibly be ejected. The majority of this vast horde are Greeks, destitute and homeless. We are told that Greece does not want them, and assigns as a reason therefor the lack of territorial domain. Other European nations assume the same attitude. The final decision of European nations as to the final disposition of this vast number of undesirables is that they shall be dumped into the United States. M. Venizelos hastened to inform the European national conference that the United States will be expected to provide the necessary funds, equip and charter ships, furnish food and clothing, and upon reaching their destination house and support them until they become self-sustaining. We are informed also that Great Britain is willing to charter vessels to the United States for the purpose of transporting these unfortunates, and that an immediate appeal will be made by those European nations mostly affected by and in closest contact with such immigrants to the United States, and that we shall be expected to respond with alacrity. The first cost to the United States of this project, according to the highest-salaried experts, says Doctor Nansen, "will be only $50,000,000."

Under the bill now being considered by Congress, should the plan of Doctor Nansen, M. Venizelos, and others be carried out one-half of these immigrants, or 550,000, must be carried on such vessels as are named in the bill, for which the owners would receive as their share of the initial cost for passenger service $25,000,000, and this in addition to the regular compensation for shipowners provided in the bill. As a member of the House Immigration Committee I am somewhat familiar with immigration problems. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, there were admitted to the United States 309,556 immigrants. Of these the largest number from particular races are, viz: Jews, 53,524; Italians, 41,154. Of the total number of immigrants for the period named there would have been required under the proposed bill to travel on such vessels 154,778, or 12,898 per month. It will be seen, therefore, that it will be greatly to the interest of the steamship companies to encourage immigration. These companies, together with the manufacturing interests, constitute the two most powerful factors in the United States whose efforts have been devoted to breaking down restrictive immigration laws. Indeed, we are informed by Winthrop L. Martin, vice president American Steamship Owners' Association, in a recent article, that the "most important of all is the section giving to American ships one-half of the immigrant traffic to this country." The proposed bill may be correctly summarized as follows:

1. Immediate sale of the present Government-owned merchant marine to steamship companies, hereafter to be called "American merchant marine."

2. Credit terms of sale of the merchant marine to steamship companies, term 15 years, interest 4 per cent, deferred 15 years.

3. Loans by the United States Government of $125,000,000 to the shipowners at 2 per cent interest; term of loan, 15 years.

4. Income-tax exemptions to owners of vessels.

5. Compensation to be paid by the Government to the owners of such vessels.

6. Compel 50 per cent of all immigrants to travel on such vessels.

7. Certain tax exemptions on such vessels.

8. Increase of compensation to the owners of such vessels.

Under the bill the Standard Oil Co., the United States Steel, the United Fruit Co., and other great shipping corporations would not only be provided with free ships for transportation of their products but they would be paid compensation for such transportation.

It would be unjust and discriminatory—

Says the mouthpiece of the American Steamship Owners' Association, Mr. Winthrop L. Martin—

to deny the compensation provided for freighters to the ships owned by the Standard Oil Co., the United States Steel, and other industrial corporations. However, ships of these great fleets will receive compensation.

It appears from the bill and the facts that the President of the United States, the Republican majority of the House committee, the Republican majority of the Senate committee, the Standard Oil Co., the United States Steel, the American Steamship Owners' Association, and the Shipping Board have all fallen upon the same plan to float the American flag upon the high seas over the vessels of the steamship companies, and all in the name of "American merchant marine." Not only have they fallen upon the same plan but they appear to be working together in perfect accord, harmony, and brotherly love. I have incorporated into my remarks, Mr. Speaker, almost the identical language of many sections of the bill. The passage of this measure defeats, for the present at least, every hope and every dream of an efficient, American-owned merchant marine, and removes from the hands of the Government such a fleet and places it into the hands of steamship companies.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming a question. Is it the program to take up an appropriation bill on Thursday, and what appropriation bill, can the gentleman tell us, will it be?

Mr. MONDELL. We hope to take up the Treasury appropriation bill.

Mr. WINGO. That will be the first?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; that will be the first. To-morrow will be Calendar Wednesday, and the call rests with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I understand they intend to bring up first their Coast Guard bill.

Mr. WINGO. Can the gentleman tell us what will be the second appropriation bill?

Mr. MONDELL. The bill for the Departments of State and Justice will probably be the next one.

In that connection, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that when we start with the appropriation bills I think they should have the right of way exclusively until they are disposed of, so long as there is an appropriation bill before the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman state for the information of the House whether he has any intention of striking the enacting clause out of the Coast Guard bill or not?

Mr. MONDELL. Any Member of the House would have the right to do that if he were recognized for that purpose.

Mr. ANTHONY. I just wanted to see what was the policy of the leadership.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. I think perhaps I ought to make a statement in regard to this migratory bird bill, since I had something to do with it. I had made arrangements to bring in a rule this morning, but I got into communication with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], in the course of which he told me that it was not convenient for him to take it up to-day. I have communicated with others interested in the bill, but I was unable to confer with gentlemen who might be opposed to it, so I thought it was not right to present the resolution at the present time inasmuch as I was unable to get into communication with gentlemen who are opposed to it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman from New York indicate when we shall have an opportunity to go to the mat on that bill with those who are opposed to it?

Mr. SNELL. I do not feel any responsibility in regard to it, and I am willing to take it up at the first opportunity.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TINCHER. Does the gentleman mind disclosing who it is that opposes the bill?

Mr. SNELL. There are several people opposed to the bill. There is no question about that.

SETTLEMENT OF EUROPEAN DEBTS TO THE UNITED STATES—LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing a very brief statement by Mr. G. W. Duvall, of Cheraw, S. C., one of the leading financiers of that State, on the question of the collection of the foreign debt.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

A PLAN LOOKING TO THE SETTLEMENT OF EUROPEAN DEBTS TO THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

(Proposed by G. W. Duvall, of Cheraw, S. C.)

At present the general opinion seems to be that no stable conditions will obtain in Europe until these debts and reparations are arranged in some permanent form, and as it is generally accepted that the individuals and companies in these countries are in much better financial condition than the Governments, the following plan looking to this settlement is presented:

As to the debts due by the various nations to the United States of America.

Each nation to issue bonds payable to the United States for the amount of its indebtedness. These bonds to bear interest at 4½ per cent per annum and to be amortized at 1½ per cent additional, making 5½ per cent per annum, so that in 35 years 7 months and 6 days they will be paid in full. There being an agreement that only a small proportion, say 10 per cent, of this 5½ per cent be withdrawn each year, the balance being used to make up the capital stock of a trust company to be called "The Trust Company of the United States of America." This trust company to then lend to the individuals, companies, and corporations in each country the balance of the interest each year during the life of the bonds, withdrawing each year the interest on money so loaned in addition to the 10 per cent above mentioned.

To show in a few words how this would work out, suppose we take the debt due by Great Britain to the United States for example. They owe us approximately $4,750,000,000. The interest on this is $261,250,000 per annum, at 5½ per cent. They would pay us the first year 10 per cent of this, or $26,125,000, leaving $235,125,000 to be loaned in Great Britain. Figuring that the trust company loaned this $235,125,000 at 4½ per cent, we would collect the end of the second year $36,705,625; that is to say, $26,125,000 from the Government and $10,580,625 from the individuals and companies, each year increasing $10,580,625 until the end of 35 years 7 months and 6 days, in which year we would collect $381,764,525. At the end of this period these bonds would have been paid in full by the Kingdom of Great Britain, and the trust company would have invested in Great Britain the sum of $8,370,450,000. This amount could then be gradually liquidated, thereby clearing the indebtedness of Great Britain to the United States of America. The debts of each of the other foreign governments could be handled in like manner.

This would give a definite financial program, and in addition to stabilizing the currency of the various governments would vastly increase the trade of the United States of America.

So much for these debts. Now as to reparations.

The indemnity to be paid by Germany should be fixed at a figure of, say, $20,000,000,000. Bonds to be issued to the various nations in proportion to their valid claims. The interest on these bonds to be invested in Germany in the same manner as indicated above, and the distribution of interest to each country to be in the proportion its share bears to the whole.

Should all of the above be carried through, Europe would have in process of definite settlement practically all matters that now cause so much uneasiness and could settle down to a definite and forward-looking program.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

AMENDMENT TO WAR RISK INSURANCE ACT.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Tennessee to withhold his point for a moment. I desire to call up a bill from the Speaker's desk. I do not think there is any objection to it. I ask to do this in view of the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that he wishes to call up appropriation bills hereafter.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee withhold his point of no quorum?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] if the bill he refers to is the one that he had up the other day?

Mr. FISH. Yes. It is all straightened out now.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will withhold the point.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take from the Speaker's table House bill 8062, and to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report by title, and moves to concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill H. R. 8062, amending subdivision (5) of section 302 of the war risk insurance act.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "$50" and insert "$20."

Page 1, line 8, after "reasonable," insert "and if the disabled person is blind, legless, or armless and is in constant need of a nurse or attendant, such additional sum shall be paid, but not exceeding $50 per month, as the director may deem reasonable."

Mr. SWEET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SWEET. Just for a question. That now applies only to those who are blind, does it?

Mr. FISH. No; it applies to the blind, legless, or armless, and not to the otherwise totally disabled.

Mr. DOWELL. Not otherwise totally disabled?

Mr. FISH. It applies to those three classes.

Mr. SWEET. It is broad enough, is it not, to include all those who are permanently totally disabled?

Mr. FISH. No; that was stricken out by amendment in the Senate.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, we can not hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is making a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. We should like to hear it.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman propound his parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WINSLOW. I should like to ask the Speaker if it is according to custom to have bills of this kind referred to the committee from which they came originally, before being considered again on the floor of the House?

The SPEAKER. No; this can be called up as a matter of right. It is a House bill with Senate amendments, called up from the Speaker's table.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a question?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Under this bill as it is amended, where a soldier is either blind, legless, or armless, he is still allowed $50 a month for a nurse, is he?

Mr. FISH. He gets $50. He received only $20 before. He now receives $50 for a nurse or attendant.

Mr. BLANTON. He now receives $50 in spite of the fact that the amendment strikes out $50 and inserts $20?

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman will read the bill carefully he will see that the first amendment does not apply to that. The wording is so involved that it might give that impression to the gentleman, but if he will read it carefully he will see that it still allows a man who is blind, legless, or armless $50 a month for a nurse.

Mr. DOWELL. Why should not a disabled soldier who is not blind but who is totally helpless be entitled to the $50 per month also?

Mr. FISH. I quite agree with the gentleman, and that was the provision in the original bill, but it was amended in the Senate so as to strike out those classifications to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. DOWELL. Does not the gentleman believe that if this bill is sent to conference there is the possibility of securing that $50 for the otherwise helpless soldier?

Mr. FISH. No; I have reason to think you could not get it.

Mr. DOWELL. In other words, it is the gentleman's belief that unless this amendment is accepted the bill will be defeated entirely?

Mr. FISH. It is. I agree with the purpose of the gentleman and will be glad to cooperate with him to secure these amendments in other bills, but it can not be done in this bill.

Mr. DOWELL. It occurs to me that helpless soldiers ought to be entitled to enough to take care of them.

Mr. FISH. There is a big distinction. A man who is helpless in bed does not need an attendant, because he is in the hospital. A man who is blind or legless does need an attendant, whether he lives at home or in a hospital. There is that distinction. Of course, I would have preferred the original bill; but, rather than delay any longer furnishing necessary relief to the blinded, legless, and armless veterans, I hope this bill will prevail.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

The question being taken, the Senate amendments were concurred in.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, December 6, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with permission granted by unanimous consent of the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD and print the so-called "slacker lists," I desire to call attention to a letter from The Adjutant General's office, dated December 1.

It is my intention to insert these lists on the 5th day of each month until all of the names are printed. No good soldier will be injured by the publication of his name in these lists; but on the contrary, if his military record is one to be proud of, the publication will only serve to call attention to that record. If by mistake the names of good soldiers have not been eliminated from the record, it will be my pleasure and duty to insert in the RECORD the facts in each individual case and to see that the facts are brought to the attention of the Secretary of War, who is as anxious as any soldier of the late war with Germany to have the records correct. Mistakes ought to be corrected while the men are living and while there is evidence to substantiate any valid claim as to service.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, December 1, 1922.

Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSON: I have the honor to transmit herewith for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 5, 1922, lists of alleged draft deserters, which lists were released by the War Department for publication between September 5 and November 4, 1922, both dates inclusive. A copy of the statement to be printed at the head of the lists is also inclosed herewith.

There is also transmitted herewith, for insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, a list of the names of registrants which have been removed from the lists of alleged draft deserters heretofore published in the RECORD, the reasons for such removals being set forth in the second paragraph of the statement which is to precede the lists in the RECORD.

Very respectfully,
ROBERT C. DAVIS,
The Adjutant General.

The following names have been removed from the lists of alleged draft deserters heretofore published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD since the publication of such names:

LOCAL BOARD FOR THE COUNTY OF CRAIGHEAD, STATE OF ARKANSAS.

1359 Max Wm. Matt Ewald, 1602 Oak Street, Marinette, Wis. (231 South Main Street, Akron, Ohio).

LOCAL BOARD FOR DIVISION NO. 1, COUNTY OF MARATHON, STATE OF WISCONSIN.

186 Joseph W. Kamenick, Marathon, Wis.

The men whose names appear below, and who were under the jurisdiction of the local boards named, were, according to the public draft records, classified and reported by the draft authorities as deserters from the military service of the United States. The lists in which these names were originally included have been given at least one month's publicity.

The name of any man who, since the publication of the lists, has been found to have actually rendered service in either our own forces or in those of the Allies during the period between May 18, 1917, and November 11, 1918, is not included; nor is that of any man who, though he rendered no service during the period mentioned, has, since the publication of his name, been found to have been erroneously inducted or to have been erroneously certified as a deserter, nor that of any man who is known to be no longer living.

Every reasonable effort has been made by the War Department to eliminate from these lists names which, for any of the aforementioned reasons, should not appear thereon. Should it develop, however, that certain of the names listed below should, for any of these reasons, likewise be removed, notice to that effect will be published in each such case in a later issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 6, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we approach this morning Thy throne of grace in the all-prevailing Name, and while we recognize the mercies vouchsafed we still confess our need of Thee. Without Thee we can not live properly, and we can not fulfill the high responsibilities of duty as in Thy fear. Be pleased to visit each heart and life, and grant a continuance of Thy favor through all the experiences of daily toil and engagements. We ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

A bill (S. 4107) to amend and supplement an act entitled "An act relating to bills of lading in interstate and foreign commerce," approved August 29, 1916; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

RETIRED PAY OF CERTAIN NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. KELLOGG submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7864) providing for sundry matters affecting the Naval Establishment, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

SALARY AND MILEAGE OF HON. CHARLES A. RAWSON.

Mr. CUMMINS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 375), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Hon. CHARLES A. RAWSON $493.15, salary from November 8, 1922, to December 1, 1922, both dates inclusive, and $459.20, mileage for attendance at the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, said sums being due him as a Senator from the State of Iowa.

ROY H. RANKIN AND EDNA T. VOGEL.

Mr. CUMMINS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 376), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Roy H. Rankin $152.67 and to Edna T. Vogel $122.67, for clerical services rendered the Hon. CHARLES A. RAWSON, a Senator from the State of Iowa, from November 8, 1922, to December 1, 1922, both dates inclusive.

ANNA CLAUDE HOWARD.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, yesterday while the calendar was under consideration the bill (S. 1883) granting a pension to Anna Claude Howard was passed by the Senate. The substance of the bill was included in the omnibus pension bill (H. R. 5214), as agreed to in conference, and was passed at the second session of the present Congress. I therefore move that the votes by which Senate bill 1883 was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I now move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, some of us did not hear the statement made by the Senator from Utah. Will he kindly repeat it?

Mr. SMOOT. The bill granting a pension to Anna Claude Howard was passed by the Senate on yesterday. The substance of the bill was included in the omnibus pension bill (H. R. 5214) passed in the second session of this Congress and was agreed to in conference. I moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill passed the Senate on yesterday, which has been agreed to, and I have moved the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah to indefinitely postpone the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

SARAH ORR.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 374. It provides for the payment of the salary of the clerk of Mrs. Felton, late a Senator from Georgia. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be reported for the information of the Senate.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 374) submitted yesterday by Mr. HARRIS, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Sarah Orr the sum of $372.94 for services as clerk from October 3, 1922, to November 21, 1922, rendered the Hon. Rebecca Latimer Felton, a Senator from the State of Georgia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have previously expressed my views about this matter, but I do not want to have the resolution acted upon without some consideration of it by the Senate. I think it is the wrong way to dispose of the matter. I took the position that Mrs. Felton was legally entitled to her seat as a Member of this body and that she ought to be paid, just as every Senator is paid, out of the regular appropriation for the officers of the legislative, judiciary, and executive branches of the Government. I can not understand how anyone can conceive that this is a proper charge against the fund which is set aside for the doing of the work which is imposed upon the United States Senate, for the expense of investigations and other matters of that character to be conducted by the Senate. It seems to me that in some way or other it carries the implication that Mrs. Felton stands in some position other than that of the ordinary Member of this body.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. CALDER. This resolution does not provide for Mrs. Felton's pay; she was paid by a resolution which was adopted by the Senate on Monday last in the last hours of the extraordinary session. This is for the pay of her clerk.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But that involves exactly the same principle.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President, it does not. Senator Felton's clerk was not assigned to any committee of the Senate, and appropriations are made for the payment of the salaries of certain clerks to committees. There is no way in which Senator Felton's clerk may be paid except as proposed in the pending resolution.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, I appreciate that there is no other way in which the clerk may be paid, but provision ought to be made by some appropriation bill to take care of such items of expenditure just the same as the items for the payment of Senators' clerks ordinarily.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I desire to say I agree with what he has said about the salary of the appointed Senator from Georgia [Mrs. Felton]. I think undoubtedly Mrs. Felton was either a Member of the Senate, or she was not; and I think she was. If she was, she was entitled to be paid out of the regular appropriations which are made for the payment of Senators; but as to the ad interim clerks of an appointed or an elected Senator, they have never been paid out of the regular appropriations, but have always been taken care of by the passage of a special resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say further to the Senator from Montana that the appropriation for the payment of Senators was made and there would not have been any deficiency in the appropriation if Senator Felton had been paid regularly as other Senators are paid. The full amount for the payment of 96 Senators is appropriated by Congress every year, and there would have been no deficiency if the salary of Mrs. Felton had been paid from that fund. However, I agree with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] so far as the payment of Mrs. Felton's clerk is concerned. The manner proposed in the resolution is the only way in which that clerk may be paid.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

SUPPLY OF WHITE ARSENIC IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I submit the resolution which I send to the desk and I ask for its immediate consideration. I present this resolution because, after consultation with certain officials of the Government, I find that great difficulty is being encountered in ascertaining certain facts concerning which information is desired. The resolution is presented in accordance with suggestions which have been made to me by those officials.

The VICE PRESIDENT. For the information of the Senate, the resolution will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 377), as follows:

Whereas there is an emergency confronting the agricultural interests of the country in view of the difficulty in obtaining arsenical insecticides for alleviating the ravages of insect pests, and especially the great need for calcium arsenate for the control of the boll weevil: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Department of Agriculture, through the Bureau of Entomology, in cooperation with the Department of the Interior, through the United States Geological Survey, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the supply of white arsenic in the United States and the possible development of additional sources of supply and to report the same to Congress at the earliest possible time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ACCOUNT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I submit the resolution which I send to the desk and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 378), as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he hereby is, requested and directed to reexamine and restate the account of the State of New York, for which appropriation was made by the act of Congress approved February 27, 1906, on the basis of like claims of Pennsylvania and Delaware, with the same force and effect as though appropriation therefor had not been made and accepted by said State, and report to the Senate the result of such statement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MERGER OF MEAT-PACKING COMPANIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Resolutions coming over from a previous day are in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to call up Senate Resolution 364, which is now on the table. I ask that the resolution may now be read as modified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read, as modified, the resolution (S. Res. 364) submitted by Mr. LA FOLLETTE November 22, 1922, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and hereby is, directed to report immediately to the Senate all information now in his possession relating to any proposed merger or mergers of large meat-packing companies, accompanying said report with a statement of the number of animals annually slaughtered under Federal inspection, tabulated by fiscal years, beginning July 1, 1918, and the proportion slaughtered by each of the five principal packers, with their subsidiary and affiliated companies; also, to report as to any application for the privilege of merger, by whom made, and what action, if any, he has taken or contemplates taking in reference to such proposed merger.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offered this resolution calling for information from the Secretary of Agriculture some days ago. The resolution as originally presented will be found in the RECORD of Wednesday, November 22. I have modified it as it is presented to the Senate this morning. I am very anxious to have the consideration of the resolution completed in time to secure action upon it by the Senate this morning, if possible, but I wish to take the time of the Senate for a few moments to present the reasons which to me seem important that the resolution should be passed at this time.

I have no information regarding the proposed merger, except as I have obtained it from what has appeared in the press from time to time. Statements appearing in the press during the last few days are so direct and positive, and some of them so obviously inspired at the White House, as to leave no doubt that such merger is in contemplation. I will read just one of these newspaper notices and select the one appearing in the New York World of November 15, 1922, which reads as follows:

NO BAR TO ARMOUR PLAN, HARDING SAYS—PRESIDENT INCLINED TO APPROVE MERGER OF TWO BIG PACKING FIRMS—DECISION NOT YET MADE—SECRETARY WALLACE'S OPINION WILL BE SOUGHT BEFORE HE ACTS.

[Special to the World.]

WASHINGTON, November 15.—President Harding evidently looks favorably on the proposal of J. Ogden Armour, president of the meat-packing firm of Armour & Co., that his concern be permitted to purchase the physical assets of Morris & Co., a rival.

Mr. Harding has made no formal decision, and before he does he will call on Secretary of Agriculture Wallace for an opinion and the results of an investigation. But it was made clear at the White House to-day the President is not adverse to the merger on principle.

Financial difficulties of the packers are back of the proposal, it was said at the White House. Mr. Armour went over the question with the President yesterday, contending, it was said, the consolidation of the two was essential to financial salvation and would mean a saving of $10,000,000 annually, which would benefit live-stock producers and the consuming public.

This article, Mr. President, does not fortify that last statement with any facts as to whether the chief beneficiaries of the saving of $10,000,000, which it is supposed will result from the merger, would not be the packers themselves. I read further from this dispatch:

SEES NO LEGAL OBSTACLE.

The White House spokesman said the Executive feels there is no legal obstacle preventing one packer from buying out another, inasmuch as the packing industry is already under Federal control. The President believes, however, it would be imprudent for a packer to make such a deal without first receiving some assurance as to the law and the attitude of the public.

The White House takes the position the Government can not give assurance of immunity from antitrust or other laws that might subsequently be transgressed. The Federal Trade Commission has nothing to do with the matter, in the opinion of the President.

Mr. Armour's presentation of the proposal resulted from the extension of Federal control over the packing industry by the present Congress, whipped on by the farm bloc. "The contention of the packers," the White House said, "is that the purchase of the rival firm would not eliminate competition as it exists and was in no manner contemplated for that purpose.

MUST CUT OVERHEAD IS PLEA.

Advocates of the merger informed the President both they and the live-stock producers have suffered heavy losses in the last 18 months. They see no solution to their troubles unless they are allowed to cut overhead by merging, it is said. The packers disclaim responsibility for the high retail costs of meats.

President Harding called Mr. Armour's attention to the fact that at one time dressed meats were selling in Washington at 57 cents a pound for the cheapest and 75 cents for the choice cuts when the animal price was only 15½ cents a pound. Mr. Armour replied that this wide margin could not be attributed to the packers. He added he did not believe the retailers could be justly accused of profiteering. The modern method of middlemen and special service are chiefly to blame, so Mr. Armour contended.

The stock producers came up for consideration during the conference. The packers, it was said, hold that the day the producer gets his stock to market governs the matter of whether he will make a profit.

Much the same form of article has recently appeared in the press quite generally and has never been in any way contradicted or denied. It seems reasonably certain, therefore, that the President and the Secretary of Agriculture have under consideration Mr. Armour's application to absorb one of the other four great meat-packing concerns of the country.

I believe the proposed merger to be contrary to law and contrary to public policy and the interests of the people of this country, and that the Senate should therefore be in possession of the information called for in this resolution at the earliest possible date. I ought to say, Mr. President, that for many days I have endeavored to get this resolution before the Senate for consideration, but the condition of the business did not admit of its being taken up until this morning.

I shall not attempt to review at this time the history of the efforts heretofore made to regulate the great meat-packing corporations. It is a shameful history of defiance of the law and of the courts on the part of the packers and is a warning of the length to which corporate greed will go in robbing the public, oppressing its employees, and defying the laws of the land. I shall not stop even to recall any of that history now, but I come directly to the purpose of my resolution.

The latest attempt by Congress to regulate the meat packers is contained in the act generally cited as the packers and stockyards act, 1921, and approved August 15, 1921. That act, as you will recall, places the meat packers directly under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture and confers upon that official many of the powers and imposes upon him many of the duties theretofore devolved upon the Federal Trade Commission by the Federal Trade Commission act of 1914.

The packers and stockyards act in section 202, among other things, provides:

It shall be unlawful for any packer to:

* * * * * * *

(e) Engage in any course of business or do any act for the purpose or with the effect of manipulating or controlling prices in commerce, or of creating a monopoly in the acquisition of, buying, selling, or dealing in any article in commerce, or of restraining commerce.

By subsequent sections, any arrangement to do any of the prohibited things is made unlawful. By section 203 of the act it is made the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture, if he has reason to believe that any of the provisions of the act is being violated, to serve a complaint upon the packers, stating the charges, and to proceed in due form to a hearing thereon. After the hearings the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make an appropriate order in the premises, and the proceedings are similar to those taken by the Federal Trade Commission in other cases.

The "packers and stockyards act" also provides that nothing therein contained shall be construed to prevent or interfere with the enforcement of the interstate commerce law or any of the antitrust or antimonopoly laws of the country.

You do not, however, in my opinion, have to go beyond the section of the "packers and stockyards act," which I have just read, to see that this proposed merger is unlawful. The mandate of the act is that no packer shall do any act for the purpose, or which has the effect of manipulating or controlling prices in commerce, or of creating a monopoly, or of restraining commerce.

Now, just exactly what does this proposed merger accomplish? Why, it simply eliminates from the meat-packing industry one of the five great concerns which now so largely control that industry and combines that concern with the principal one of the others.

In looking over a chart published by the Federal Trade Commission in June, 1919, in its report on the meat-packing industry, I find that at that time there were a considerable number of cities in this country in which, of the five great meat packers, only Armour and Morris had branch houses. In other words, such competition as existed in these cities existed only between Armour and Morris. Let Armour swallow up Morris, as this merger proposes, and, of course, your competition in all of those cities is gone, if there be at the present time any competition whatever between them, and if they be not already engaged in a combination that is unlawful.

I have not undertaken to determine just how many such cities there were at the time of the Federal Trade Commission report, but a glance at the Federal Trade Commission map shows that included among them were such cities as Kingston, Auburn, and Poughkeepsie, of New York; Altoona, Pa.; Helena, Ark.; Decatur and Danville, Ill., and others.

Not only did the competitive condition I have mentioned exist in the cities referred to but it necessarily existed outside of the large cities in considerable portions of the country covered by the auto truck routes and "peddler" refrigerator cars of the five great packers.

Now, nothing can be more certain than that as to these sections of the country the effect of the proposed merger is to place the whole matter of prices and of buying and selling in the hands of Armour, so far as the large packing concerns are concerned. That, of course, is the purpose, or at least one of the purposes, of the proposed merger.

It may be said that these concerns do not compete, anyway. I do not profess to know about that, sir, but I know that they have sworn over and over again that they did compete, and that there was the fiercest kind of competition between them. For example, Mr. Armour, testifying before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in January, 1919, pages 518 and 519 of the hearings, said:

I desire to say with all of the emphasis that words can convey that Armour & Co. are not now, and have not been for many years, a party in the most remote degree to any pool, arrangement, agreement, or combination of any kind whatever for the control, regulation, limitation, or restriction of the purchase of live stock or the sale of any of the products or by-products thereof.

Mr. Edward Morris, in the same hearings, testified, page 1877:

I want to say, just as positively as the English language will permit, that Morris & Co. is not in any agreement to control the price to be paid for the live meat animal or the price to be obtained for fresh meats or meat food products.

I quote just a few lines from the testimony of Mr. J. Ogden Armour in the hearing before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry January 27, 1919:

The CHAIRMAN (Senator Gore). Do you compete with Swift and Morris in selling meats?
Mr. ARMOUR. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Is the competition pretty decided?
Mr. ARMOUR. Yes, sir; I think so.

Now, Mr. President, there is nothing plainer than that this competition between Armour and Morris will be absolutely wiped out by this merger; and the competition between these two concerns is all the competition there is at the points mentioned between the Big Five, or, at least, was at the time the Federal Trade Commission report was published, together with the maps to which I have referred. What the conditions are to-day is one of the things upon which I am seeking information.

Note well the language of the inspired White House article which I have quoted:

The White House spokesman said the Executive feels there is no legal obstacle preventing one packer from buying out another, inasmuch as the packing industry is already under Federal control.

I commend this language particularly to the farm bloc and the other Senators who believed that by means of the "packers' and stockyards act" a more complete control would be obtained of the packers' combine. It seems that this act, so far from being the means of more efficiently curbing these trusts, is to be made the excuse and reason for letting them proceed with their unlawful combinations and conspiracies. It is not true that the "packers and stockyards act" contains anything authorizing or justifying this merger. On the contrary, it prohibits it in the plainest possible language. But if the "White House spokesman" correctly represents the views of the White House this act, which was offered and urged as a means of relieving the people from packers' control, is to be put forward as the reason why such control, even as it previously existed, is to be abandoned.

One other matter, Mr. President, requires consideration at this point. Why are the great packing houses frankly bargaining with Government officials for permission to do an unlawful act? The answer is that the great packers are in financial difficulties. That is the answer they make themselves. I quote again from the World article:

Financial difficulties of the packers are back of the proposal, it was said at the White House. Mr. Armour went over the question with the President yesterday, contending, it was said, the consolidation of the two was essential to financial salvation and would mean a saving of $10,000,000 annually, which would benefit live-stock producers and the consuming public.

Whenever it is necessary to put over a job, no matter how barefaced may be the robbery of the people it involves, it is always explained as a measure for the benefit of the public.

But why are the great packers in financial difficulties, if they are? I believe the answer to that question can be found in the testimony of the packers themselves. J. Ogden Armour, before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, on January 21, 1919, testified:

Mr. ARMOUR. There are a great many independent packers in the field, and they all make more money than we do.
The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sims). At one time, when the five great packers began the war on each other as to volume of business, or, I mean, if at any time the five great packers were to begin a war on each other as to volume, and that war should lead to sharp competition, then the little fellows have got to get close to the shore, haven't they?
Mr. ARMOUR. Not necessarily; because the expenses of the big packers are a great deal more in proportion to his size than the little packer.
The CHAIRMAN. A great deal more as to the unit of profits?
Mr. ARMOUR. No; in size.
The CHAIRMAN. The unit of profit is what you make your money on, is it not?
Mr. ARMOUR. Yes; and in the volume or size of business. But the little packer doesn't have the expense of the big packers. The little packer to-day will make more money in proportion than the big packer will make. I do not think there is a little packer in the room now who wouldn't say that.
The CHAIRMAN. Then you gentlemen ought to split up, and then you could do better than you do now.
Mr. ARMOUR. No; while there is a greater percentage, it is not so large in the aggregate as the big packer will make.
The CHAIRMAN. The overhead of the small packer, if he hasn't cars of his own, would add a great deal more to his unit of profit.
Mr. ARMOUR. No, sir; I don't think so.
The CHAIRMAN. You large packers, then, are not doing your business economically if you can not conduct it at as little cost as anybody else.
Mr. ARMOUR. No; I think in any business that the small man's overhead up to a certain point is always smaller than that of the big man. When the small man goes past that point, of course, it rises.
The CHAIRMAN. Then the fact that the public, inasmuch as it has to procure from the large packers a very large percentage of their purchases of such meat as they handle, have to pay you that much more therefor; and if the big packers can not serve the public as economically as the little packers can, it is a very good reason why in the public interest they should cease to exist.
Mr. ARMOUR. That does not exist only up to a certain point. It can not exist beyond a certain point where the little man gets big.
The CHAIRMAN. With the fierce competition that you say exists between the big packers, say Swift & Co., and the others, in every respect—and it is not competition unless it is real and genuine—I can not see how the little packer without the established trade that you have and the capital that you have can possibly make more money per unit of product out of his investment than you can.
Mr. ARMOUR. They do.
The CHAIRMAN. Then the public is interested in having the cheapest production?
Mr. ARMOUR. Well, but you understand that only goes to a certain point, as I say, and when you pass that point you can not do it.

Again Mr. Armour, testifying January 27, 1919, before the Senate Committee on Agriculture, said:

The CHAIRMAN (Senator Gore). You stated the other day that the small packing houses paid better than the big ones?
Mr. ARMOUR. In a percentage way; yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. That is the best test, I take it. In a percentage way?
Mr. ARMOUR. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Notwithstanding these economies and efficiency brought about by the big packing establishments, still the small packing establishments realize a better profit on their investment?
Mr. ARMOUR. Yes, sir.

Herbert Hoover, in a letter to the President regarding control of the big meat packers released to the newspapers by the United States Food Administration, Washington, February 10, 1919, among other things, said:

The problem we have to consider, however, is the ultimate social result of this expanding domination, and whether it can be replaced by a system of better social character and of equal economic efficiency for the present and of greater promise for the future. It is certain, to my mind, that these businesses have been economically efficient in their period of competitive upgrowth, but, as time goes on, this efficiency can not fail to diminish and, like all monopolies, begin to defend itself by repression rather than by efficiency. The worst social result of this whole growth in domination of trades is the undermining of the initiative and the equal opportunity of our people and the tyranny which necessarily follows in the commercial world.

Mr. Hoover's letter strikingly emphasizes the same point which the packers unwittingly made against themselves, namely, that they have already grown so big, they have extended themselves so greatly, they have taken up so many lines of enterprise, that they have reached the point where they must defend themselves from outside competition "by repression rather than by efficiency."

This proposed merger simply seeks to carry one step further this mad scheme of creating greater and ever greater monopoly in the packing industry. By the confessions of the packers themselves they have reached the point where their great organizations are uneconomic. If their testimony is true, they have reached the point now where they can not successfully compete with the small independents. J. Ogden Armour, in his report to his stockholders, January 18, 1922, said:

Our business has long since ceased to be one merely of meat packing. In order to distribute risks and to lessen the probability of loss, we have engaged in the further processing of various of our by-products and of cotton-oil products, etc.

There you have a pretty frank statement of what is the matter with the great meat packers. The trouble is that they are meat packers no longer. With the millions that they have extorted from the people they have reached out into other lines of business, and the losses and the vast overhead connected with these other lines must eventually be paid for by enhancing the price of meat products.

The five great meat-packing concerns were built up largely through (1) railroad rates and special privileges, which gave them unfair advantage over competitors; (2) unfair methods of competition, whereby they used their unfairly acquired power to crush out independent competitors; and (3) combinations between themselves which enabled them to control and manipulate prices to their own advantage.

Deprived by legislation, to some extent at least, of these unfair and unlawful advantages, they now appear to be reaping the inevitable result of their violation of economic laws. What they need is not further combinations and mergers, but they need to dispose of some of their far-flung plants and other lines of business to other individuals and concerns competent to handle that business, thereby increasing healthy and fair competition, instead of attempting to throttle it by further combinations. This, I take it, was the point, in part at least, of the consent decree under which it was agreed they would sell their stockyards. Under that decree they were to dispose of this property on or before February 27, 1922. Whether the decree has yet been complied with or not I do not know.

The Senate will remember that it adopted a resolution calling upon the Department of Justice for information as to what its attitude was toward that consent decree, and what it was doing to carry it out, and whether or not it was actively participating in a proceeding that would defer the execution of the consent decree, and indeed modify it, thereby destroying its effectiveness altogether. I know from inquiries which I have made that the court has granted an extension with regard to the execution of that consent decree, but I have not inquired within a few days about it. So far as I was able to gain any information on the point about a week ago, when I hoped to get the floor to discuss this matter, the whole situation was in statu quo.

Some idea of the extent to which this proposed merger of Armour and Morris would affect the industry may be gathered from the fact that for 1916 the live weight of animals slaughtered was:

	Pounds.
Armour	3,725,000,000
Morris	1,870,000,000
Swift, Wilson, and Cudahy	7,635,000,000
Total of the big five	13,230,000,000
Total of all animals slaughtered under Federal inspection	18,050,000,000

Armour-Morris proportion of the big five, 42 per cent.

Armour-Morris proportion of the total of inspected slaughtered animals slaughtered not only by the big five but by everybody else, so far as the statistics give us any returns, 31 per cent.

These figures were obtained from the Federal Trade Commission meat report of 1919 and relate to the business of 1916, and are the latest available.

I have this memorandum regarding the consent decree, which I think I should have introduced a little earlier.

The latest information available is that contained in hearings on Senate Resolution 211, containing report dated April 8, 1922, of trustees appointed under packer consent decree:

1. Up to date that the packers had disposed of only some minor holdings in small stockyards.

2. They had been unable to dispose of merger holdings in large stockyards.

3. Packers have applied for extension for one year ending March 3, 1923, in which to dispose of holdings. This was opposed by attorneys for governor, who desired to grant only four months' extension, but the court granted extension for full year ending March 3, 1923.

Mr. President, we know something about mergers in the meat-packing industry. The history of that industry is replete with them. These mergers simply mean more fees and commissions for the insiders, more watered stock, more bonds, and eventually more overhead, the carrying charges of which must eventually be paid by the public in increased prices.

The famous memorandum which Louis F. Swift wrote to apprise his brothers—Edward F. and George H.—of the progress of the negotiations to absorb Schwarzschild & Sulzberger by Swift & Armour is worth referring to, and is typical of what occurs in these mergers. I quote from this memorandum as found in the report of the Federal Trade Commission of the Meat-Packing Industry (1919), page 170:

E. B. S.—

Those are the initials of one of the Swifts, I will say by way of explanation—

Want your vote by wire if go any further. Of course, if bankers get it (in) will help our stock to start, but can't tell what will lead to.

L. F. S.

P. S.: Am sure nothing doing unless go to $10 or near it. Forgot to mention Kuhn, Loeb is in pu qui(e)t or (on) bank deal (think it's too much to steal to admit in open) and may get fourth if possible otherwise. Salomon & Halgarten will sign. G. F. Suis seems afraid that four years' audit won't suit bankers; guess books pretty raw; also fears listing stock and making market may fail.

There is much more along the same line, but I will not take up the time of the Senate to read it, but it shows how the expenses are augmented and higher and higher profits distributed among the packers and others. It is the old, old story of graft and commissions and fees and bogus stock to insiders and bankers! That is the school of finance and business where the Big Five learned their lessons. It is fair to presume that the proposed merger is not unlike the previous ones, especially since it is proposed, apparently, to put it through without the investigation which the law contemplates.

One point upon which the Congress will be enlightened if this resolution is adopted is the proportion of business done to-day by each of the Big Five as well as by the independents.

But, Mr. President, aside from the question of legality and the question of public policy involved in this proposed merger, there is a deeper and more fundamental question presented. Under what law does the President of the United States or the Secretary of Agriculture give to the packers an opinion in advance that their action will be legal or illegal? Everyone knows that there is no law which gives to either of these officials any authority or any right to do the thing they are asked to do by Mr. Armour and his associates.

It has not yet reached the point in this country where any law has been passed which authorizes the President to sell indulgences to lawbreakers or to give them away to favorites. If he grants such indulgence or privilege, he must do it without the sanction of law. Everyone knows, of course, that if the President should give the opinion to these packers that their proposed merger was lawful, that such Executive action would be tantamount to promising that the courts would take no proceeding either to prevent the combination or to enforce against it the plain letter of the law once it had been formed. As well, sir, might the gentlemen seeking this merger go before a court and seek to extort from the court a promise that they would not be prosecuted for their violation of the law.

It will be recalled that the recently proposed merger of the Lackawanna group of steel companies was abandoned when the Federal Trade Commission filed a complaint that the combine would result in unfair competition. Unfortunately, as I believe, the Federal Trade Commission has been deprived of all power by the "packers and stockyards act" to interfere to prevent the present merger, unless the Secretary of Agriculture calls upon the commission to make an investigation and report. By section 406 of the "packers and stockyards act" the Congress deliberately provided as follows:

On and after the enactment of this act, and so long as it remains in effect, the Federal Trade Commission shall have no power or jurisdiction so far as relating to any matter which by this act is made subject to the jurisdiction of the Secretary, except * * * when the Secretary of Agriculture, in the exercise of his duties hereunder, shall request of the said Federal Trade Commission that it make investigations and report in any case.

If this proposed merger could bear investigation, that provision of the "packers and stockyards act" would have been invoked, in my opinion, and the Federal Trade Commission called upon to make an investigation for which it is completely equipped. That commission already has great knowledge of the packing business on account of the studies heretofore made.

Prior to the enactment of that provision it was the duty of the Federal Trade Commission, of their own motion and initiative, under the act of 1914, when they saw such unwarranted and unlawful proceeding under way, to investigate. They were empowered to act, and would have been acting in this contemplated proceeding, I have no doubt, except for the fact that they are barred apparently from lifting a hand to arrest such unlawful action. The Federal Trade Commission could have conducted the investigation, for which it is completely equipped, being the only organization under this Government of ours that I know of that is prepared, with competent experts and able attorneys and the will to execute, to make such an investigation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I gladly yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I interrupt the Senator because I think the point the Senator is now making ought to be emphasized. I believe attention ought to be called to the fact that the particular provision which the Senator has just read was one of the main differences—I think the greatest difference—in the packer legislation between the Senate bill as it came from the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and the House bill. It was beaten by a majority of only three, and I wish those who voted when we came to a test vote between the two bills to realize now the truth of what the Senator said, that if it had not been and was not now for that provision in the law the Federal Trade Commission, probably without any request from anybody, would have made an investigation that would have prevented the merger which is probably going to take place.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And would have saved the time of the Senate taken up for its consideration and the action of the Senate, which will follow a report from the Secretary of Agriculture if the report warrants it, of conducting a further investigation into the matter.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Just a moment, please. We had a superior body of men organized under the law, one of the best laws that has been enacted in many years, in my humble opinion, the law creating the Federal Trade Commission. We had a body of trained men who were doing the most thoroughgoing work and looking into all matters of unfair competition between business organizations in the country. Mr. President, I did not take the time of the Senate to go more fully into it, but I do agree with the Senator from Nebraska that it ought to be emphasized at this time to make the Senate more cautious and Congress more cautious in the future. We struggled for days here over the proposition as to whether the power of the Federal Trade Commission with respect to the packers should be taken away from them or not. It was the subject, this legislation was the subject, of the greatest contention between the Senate and the House, and I hope the time is near at hand when that power, taken from the Federal Trade Commission at that time, will be restored to it. I hope to introduce, possibly before the day is over—if not, then to-morrow—a bill restoring that power to the Federal Trade Commission, and to obtain for it early consideration.

I now yield with great pleasure to the Senator from Oklahoma. I beg his pardon for not yielding before.

Mr. OWEN. I thank the Senator. I wished to call attention, at the moment when I rose, that the time was near at hand when the act could be amended and that it should be amended. I wished to suggest to the Senator and to the Senate that the commission, which has been so grossly abused on this floor for its laborious and faithful report on the Beef Trust, deserves—and the public interest requires—all honor and support by Congress. They reported that the Beef Trust controlled over 700 subsidiary companies, controlling the food products of the country under this gigantic monopoly. It is high time that the powers of the Federal Trade Commission were restored, and that the people of the country were protected from the exactions of the Beef Trust and its subsidiaries. The one great overpowering issue in America is the control of the abuses of monopoly, and the time approaches when genuine control in the public interest is going to be effected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I most emphatically agree with the observations of the Senator from Oklahoma. As I said, I shall introduce a bill within the next 48 hours to bring about that result. It may not pass at the present session because of the condition of business, but it will come early before the Senate for its consideration at a time when I think the situation will be more favorable for it.

If this proposed merger had any legal basis it would not be necessary to avoid all investigation of the subject and take it up with the President. He can not, of course, conduct any investigation at all, but he can effectually restrain the Department of Justice, and through that department the United States district attorneys, from taking any action in the premises, and he can prevent his Secretary of Agriculture from filing a complaint against the combination either after it is organized or to prevent its organization.

Mr. President, one of the most dangerous and wicked practices which has grown up largely in our day is that by which great corporations go either to the President or to the heads of departments and make a bargain in advance for immunity for the crimes they are about to commit.

In the case of this particular proposed merger, sir, it is either (1) plainly lawful or (2) plainly unlawful or (3) its lawfulness or unlawfulness is in doubt. If it is plainly lawful, then, sir, of course, there is not the slightest reason or excuse for bargaining or attempting to bargain with the officials about it in advance. If it is plainly unlawful, then the attempt to secure official sanction for it is nothing less than asking to have the officials agree to compound a crime. If the lawfulness or unlawfulness of the proposed action is such that there may be reasonable doubt about it, then by all means the officials who will have occasion to pass upon the legality of the action ought not to be bound by promises in advance concerning the decision they will make.

The least we can do, Mr. President, is to adopt the resolution so that we may know, and the people of the country may know, something as to the effect the proposed merger would have upon the meat-packing industry, and what steps, if any, officials of the Government are taking to maintain and enforce the laws which have been passed to protect the public from the unlawful practices of the meat packers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

GRADE PERCENTAGES OF ENLISTED MEN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, upon yesterday when the calendar was called the last bill on the calendar was reached, being the bill (S. 4037) to amend the grade percentages of enlisted men, as prescribed in section 4b of the national defense act as amended, to which the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] made objection; not that he was opposed to the bill, but stating that he hoped he might have an opportunity to examine a letter which he had received which he thought related to a proposition which was involved in the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if we are going on with the consideration of the calendar, Senators ought to be here; and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was about to make the same suggestion, in order that the bill to which I have referred might be disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bayard	Gooding	Moses	Smoot
Borah	Harreld	Nelson	Spencer
Brandegee	Harris	New	Sterling
Brookhart	Heflin	Norris	Townsend
Broussard	Hitchcock	Overman	Trammell
Calder	Johnson	Owen	Underwood
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Page	Wadsworth
Caraway	Kendrick	Pepper	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Keyes	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Ladd	Pittman	Warren
Elkins	La Follette	Ransdell	Watson
Ernst	Lodge	Sheppard	Weller
Fernald	McKellar	Shields	Willis
Glass	McNary	Smith

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAPPER in the chair). Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, upon yesterday, as I have stated, upon the call of the calendar Senate bill 4037, being the last bill on the calendar, was reached. When that bill was called the request was made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that he be permitted until to-day to examine into the matter. Upon that request the bill was put over. I now ask unanimous consent for the consideration of that bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4037) to amend the grade percentages of enlisted men as prescribed in section 4b of the national defense act as amended. It proposes that hereafter the respective grade percentages prescribed in section 4b of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, of the total authorized number of enlisted men shall not exceed 0.79 per cent for the first grade, 2.1 per cent for the second grade, 3.4 per cent for the third grade, 9.2 per cent for the fourth grade, 9.5 per cent for the fifth grade, and 25 per cent for the sixth grade; and that the aforementioned section 4b shall be amended accordingly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that the letter to which I referred on yesterday I find does not relate to the matter covered by this bill. I have no objection to the consideration and passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCESSIVE INTEREST RATES OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution 335, being the Order of Business No. 859. The resolution was passed over yesterday when reached on the call of the calendar. There should be no objection to the resolution, and I am anxious to have it passed to-day.

Mr. MOSES. Let the resolution be read for information.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Assistant Secretary read Senate Resolution 335, submitted by Mr. HEFLIN August 10, 1922, and reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry without amendment, as follows:

Whereas it has been charged on the floor of the Senate that the amendment to the Federal reserve act authorizing the charging of progressive interest rates had been obtained largely as a result of express and definite assurances given to Members of Congress by W. P. G. Harding, governor of the Federal Reserve Board, that the object and purpose of said legislation was to secure a fairer and more equitable distribution of the funds of the Federal reserve system and was expressly designed to prevent the undue absorption of Federal reserve funds in certain large cities at the expense of the great farming interests in the West and South, and at the expense of the smaller business man throughout the country; and

Whereas the official records show that the said "progressive rates" after the passage of the law were put into effect only in the agricultural sections of the West, South, and Southwest, including the four Federal reserve districts of Atlanta, St. Louis, Kansas City, and Dallas, and were not put into effect in New York and other big money centers, where the funds of the Federal reserve system were principally loaned; and

Whereas the official records show that its country banks were charged unconscionable and wholly indefensible interest rates, and that these inhuman rates were exacted from many banks in the States of Alabama, Colorado, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, and others; and

Whereas the reserve board defeated two resolutions offered by the former Comptroller of the Currency, one designed to limit interest rates to 6 per cent per annum, and when that was defeated another limiting interest rates charged by Federal reserve banks to 10 per cent per annum; and

Whereas the undue concentration of Federal reserve funds to the big cities is illustrated in the fact that in the autumn of 1920 the official records show that the national banks in New York City, in proportion to their total loans and discounts, were being accommodated with three times as large an amount of Federal reserve funds as were the 7,600 "country" national banks throughout the entire United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board be requested to obtain from the Federal Reserve Banks of Atlanta, St. Louis, Dallas, and Kansas City statements showing all cases where interest ranging between 10 per cent and 87½ per cent per annum, both inclusive, was exacted from member banks, giving names of the banks, their capital and surplus, and location, where 10 per cent per annum or more was charged on loans and rediscounts, the rate and amount of interest charged in each instance as expressed in dollars and cents; also let the statement show whether the Federal reserve banks have refunded to each member bank from which such exactions were made the amount of such interest collected in excess of 10 per cent per annum upon each loan upon which such interest was charged.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I presume the Senator will not object to having the preamble stricken from the resolution.

Mr. HEFLIN. The preamble is true, but I can understand, of course, that some Senators have not investigated as I have the statements contained therein.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the preamble ought to be stricken out, so that the resolution may merely call for the information desired. The preamble refers, for instance, to "unconscionable rates of interest." That is the Senator's own idea. It may be so; I will not say that it is not; but if we adopt the resolution the preamble, I think, should be stricken out. If that may be done, so that the resolution of the Senator will merely call for the information requested, I shall have no objection to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the information set out in the preamble is absolutely correct. It can be verified by the records; but if Senators who have not had the opportunity to look into the records object to voting for the preamble part of it I am willing to have it stricken out. I am anxious to get the information mentioned through the Federal Reserve Board. If the Senator prefers that the preamble be stricken out I am willing that it be done. The absence of the preamble will in no wise affect the body of the resolution, which directs the Federal Reserve Board to furnish the information requested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Alabama consents to striking out the preamble.

Mr. HEFLIN. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The premable will be stricken out. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Alabama, as modified.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the call of the Calendar having been completed, it is in order, is it not, to proceed with the unfinished business of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can be taken up by motion at this time.

Mr. NEW. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1452, the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1452) providing for establishing shooting grounds for the public, for establishing game refuges and breeding grounds, for protecting migratory birds, and requiring a Federal license to hunt them.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, on yesterday the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] submitted an amendment which he thought and I think everybody thought had been adopted. Through some inadvertence or misunderstanding that amendment does not appear in the printed bill as having been adopted. I therefore send it to the desk and submit it. In so far as I can do so, I accept it. I think it is all right, and a proper amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It was adopted yesterday.

Mr. NEW. The record does not show it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, at the proper place, the following:

Nothing in this act contained shall be construed as subjecting any lands acquired, held, or used by the United States for military purposes to any of the provisions of this act.

Mr. NEW. I think at the end of section 2, as amended, would be a proper place for that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that there is an amendment pending, offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I withdraw my amendment at this time in order to let this one be acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas withdraws his amendment. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] for the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, it seems to me that this is unnecessary legislation. All matters of this kind ought to be left with the States. There seems to be no end of harassing our people with laws and restrictions. In our business matters we hardly know which way to turn; and now it is proposed to take charge of what little pleasure is left to the people and not allow them to hunt without getting a license from Washington.

It is a little amusing to read the report of the Secretary of Agriculture on this bill. It shows that he knew absolutely nothing about it, because in his concluding paragraph on page 3 he says:

The bill is well drawn and offers a solution of the problem of raising adequate funds for migratory bird protection and for the acquisition of public shooting grounds without the necessity of regular annual appropriations.

It seems that the Secretary is very much in love with the bill. He says it is well drawn. I believe the author of the bill came here yesterday and offered 14 amendments. So it shows that somebody is mistaken about it—either the author of the bill or the Secretary of Agriculture, or perhaps both.

Mr. President, we are making the people of this country dissatisfied with our Government. They have reason to be dissatisfied. We are hampering them, we are restricting them, we are making crimes out of things that are not criminal. Why, under this bill some man who steps out with his shotgun on Saturday afternoon, after he gets through his week's labors, and shoots a migratory bird, is subject to be haled up in the United States court and fined $500 or placed in jail six months, and darkies will have to secure licenses from the Government to hunt rabbits.

That seems to me to be ridiculous, absurd, preposterous, out of place, and uncalled for. It is enough to make Bolsheviks out of our people, and certainly we have enough wrong principles now without making our Government more unpopular. It will not be long until we have to come to Washington to get a license to play marbles in the afternoon, or to go rabbit hunting, or to carry on whatever other little sports we may have.

I am not much of a huntsman myself. I never had much time to give to recreation and pleasure. I have been employed in business matters, trying to make a living; but there are plenty of people who do enjoy a little sport, and I do not want them hampered by any such law as this. There is no occasion for it except to try to create large hunting preserves for people who are able to hunt and who spend their time in no useful occupation. These large preserves had better be cut up into small farms or small tracts, so as to encourage actual settlers thereon to help build up the country, to make a living for the people, and to pay taxes to the Government.

This bill is along the line of many others proposed by our Republican brethren. They seek to go ahead and create offices and tax the people to give dead beats something to do, or some occupation without work, where they will draw a salary from the Government. It will not be long until they will come here and ask for an appropriation to buy marshlands, and then they will need caretakers. Then I presume they will want boats to go around in the little streams to keep trespassers off. Then they will want an Army post to guard the land. Then they will have to have physicians to take care of the soldiers. Then they will have to have automobiles in which to transport the officers, and chauffeurs and mechanics to keep up the automobiles, and an unending line of positions, or at least employ people to do nothing and to draw compensation out of the Treasury.

I consider this about the last extreme to which our Government could go—keeping a man from shooting even a woodpecker. I do not know whether a woodpecker is a migratory bird or not; I am not very much up on the definitions. It seems to me to be the height of folly to put a poor devil in jail for six months at the expense of the Government for shooting a bird that was possibly pulling up his corn or interfering with his wheat or his rye, or something like that.

I do not know where you are going to stop legislation if you keep on with these things. It does seem to me that we have lost all sense of proportion and common sense, and there will be no end to it, and the people will just simply hold up their hands in despair. About all they will be able to do will be to go home and go to bed, maybe, because if they should go outside they might be arrested and put in a Federal prison.

In most of the States of the Union there is no public domain, and here we are trying to create a fund to go and buy one. Then we will ask for more money to finish paying for it; so it does seem to me to be about the height of folly. I sincerely hope that no such legislation as this will be enacted. Certainly it is time to call a halt and to become sane or to show common judgment. There is sufficient law now on the subject of migratory birds.

On page 2, line 14, the tenant of the land is not even allowed to shoot a bird on the land he has rented and is occupying and where he has his home. I move to strike out the word "and" and insert "or." I hope to improve the bill a little bit, so that one who is not fortunate enough to own land shall be allowed to shoot a bird that is flopping around on a place he has rented and is trying to eat up his cherries or his fruit. I hope to improve it that much, anyway.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention to the fact that under this bill you could not hunt on your woodland, your wild land, nor could you hunt on your own land unless you lived on it.

Mr. DIAL. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. CARAWAY. You might own it, but you could not hunt on it unless you lived on it.

Mr. DIAL. So a man in town could not go out on his own plantation and hunt there. Some of us happen to own a little land out in the country that we do not live on. I thank the Senator from Arkansas for bringing that matter to my attention. I own some hillsides myself out in the country, and I could not go out there and take my shotgun along with the little boys and let them shoot a bird unless I should go and live out there; neither could the tenant. I thank the Senator from Arkansas for the suggestion. Under this bill a tenant could not shoot on his own place. So I offer that amendment and I hope it will be adopted, and then I hope the bill will be defeated, because, as I say, it is extreme legislation. It goes away beyond what the Congress of the United States ought to engage in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from South Carolina restate his amendment?

Mr. DIAL. Yes. On page 2, line 14, between "person" and "occupied," I move to strike out the word "and" and insert the word "or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Before the word "occupied," on line 14, in an amendment already agreed to——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was previously agreed to.

Mr. DIAL. I make that motion, Mr. President. I move to reconsider the vote whereby that amendment was agreed to, with the view of making that amendment to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. NEW. I have not yet understood just exactly what it is that is proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 14, in an amendment already agreed to, before the word "occupied," it is proposed to strike out the word "and" and to insert the word "or," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That such license shall not be required to be procured by any person or by any member of his immediate family for the purpose of hunting, pursuing, shooting, capturing, or killing any such migratory bird on any farm land owned by such person or occupied by him as his place of permanent abode.

Mr. NEW. I do not object to the adoption of the amendment proposed to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was heretofore agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish to ascertain whether the Senator from Indiana will accept an amendment to this measure, the so-called migratory bird bill, which would require the procuring of a Federal license to hunt by those people only who want to go upon public game preserves or public shooting grounds. If so, I shall have no objection to this legislation. If the funds which are to be raised by taxes are to be used to maintain public shooting grounds, and only those people who use the grounds for shooting purposes shall pay the license, I have no objection.

I can conceive of no reason, however, why a man owning or living upon a piece of land in Alabama, for instance, who wants to hunt, should be required to pay a license fee, and that money so raised be used in buying a bird preserve in Arkansas, where such a man never would go, and where he could not hunt if he were to go, because the law forbids a nonresident shooting; in other words, requiring him to contribute to a fund to purchase a shooting ground and maintain it where he could not go and which he could not use.

If the people who expect to use these bird preserves, and want them, desire to contribute to a fund to maintain them, I am willing that they shall do so; that a law shall be written which will require them to pay a tax before they may go upon one of these public game preserves for the purpose of hunting. I see nothing unfair about that and am not opposed to it. But I am unalterably opposed to taxing a man in one State, for instance, to hunt in his own local community, where he will never see a public game preserve, never be able to go upon one of these shooting grounds, in order to raise a fund to buy and maintain one in some State where he could not go, because there is a provision in this bill that one shall be subject to all the regulations of the State with reference to hunting, if that regulation is more stringent than this law itself. Besides, Congress could not, if it wanted to, grant to a resident in one State the right to enjoy the privilege of public shooting in another, if the other State by law prohibits it.

Therefore, let us allow the people who are going to enjoy the benefits, who want the legislation, to bear the cost; but let us not tax everybody everywhere in order to purchase a bird preserve at some place where they could not go if they wanted to go, and where they could not enjoy hunting if they wanted to go and enjoy it, because of prohibitions in State laws. If the Senator from Indiana will accept an amendment of that kind, on page 2—the Senator shakes his head?

Mr. NEW. I shook my head in response to a motion made to me by the Senator's colleague.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator, then, was not refusing to accept this amendment?

Mr. NEW. Not at that moment. If the Senator means to put that question now, I will say that I could not accept it.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator means he would not. There is nothing to prohibit him.

Mr. NEW. I would not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, I want the Senator to say what he means.

Mr. NEW. Very well. The Senator will say what he means, then, and say that he neither could nor would accept that amendment.

Mr. CARAWAY. I rather imagine that before the legislation passes the Senator will find out that he can.

Mr. NEW. Very well.

Mr. OVERMAN. Do I understand that if this bill were to become a law, and I should give a hunter a right to hunt deer or wild turkey on my land, he would have to have a Federal license?

Mr. CARAWAY. That would be its effect, and if he did not have such a license the Federal authorities would put him in jail for six months and fine him $500 and revoke the Senator's license, so that he could not hunt after. If the Senator from Indiana had read his bill before he introduced it he would know what was in it. I know there is much in the bill for which the Senator from Indiana would not stand, if he should find out what they were.

Mr. ROBINSON. The provisions of the bill are applicable to all migratory birds, including ducks, geese, snipe, plover, and other migratory birds.

Mr. CARAWAY. The way it was drawn, a part of it applied also to a migratory fish, whatever he might be. You could not shoot a fish in your own fish bucket.

Mr. OVERMAN. Would a man hunting duck on some little pond away up in the interior, away from the coast, have to have a license?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; and if he did not somebody with the bottom of an oyster can pinned on his coat to show he was a deputy marshal would arrest him. Of all foolishness gone to seed, this is the worst. There is nothing on earth in it except an attempt to make everybody pay to help establish shooting preserves for those people who happen to be near enough to them to enable them to go on them and enjoy them. The law was amended, almost over the objection of the Senator from Indiana. It provided that if you rented land you could not go on your own rented land. The bill as it is now proposed provides that if you own land, and you want to hunt upon your own land, it must be farm land. If it were woodland you could not hunt on it. You can hunt migratory game in your cotton patch, but you can not go into your woods lot to do so; and you can hunt fish if you can get an affidavit from the fish that he is not migratory, but if he is a migratory fish, God bless your soul, you stay off him. That is, as the bill was presented.

It goes beyond that. Just to show how absolutely everything that could be absurd and obnoxious was put into the bill—although the Senator from Indiana says he can not accept an amendment to it—if you own land, and it is farm land, and you should not live on it, you can not hunt on it. If you live in an incorporated town and your farm lands happen to be in the country, where farm lands usually are, you can not go upon them without being arrested for trespassing upon your own field. Of course, the writer of the bill did not know that the right of a man to go upon his own property can not be taken away, even by the Senate. All they think is necessary in order to abolish constitutions, State rights, and individual rights is to write a law and give somebody the right to arrest you for exercising an inalienable right. The Supreme Court, over and over again, has said that you can not prohibit a man from going upon land to which he has a right, and in a very well considered case which I recall, growing out of a dispute between the States of Maryland and Virginia about the right to hunt oysters, or something like that—a "migratory" oyster, as my friend the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] suggests—it was declared that if a man has the legal right to the possession of land you can not prevent his taking game upon it. But there is no reason why that should be dragged into the Senate, because the Senator from Indiana can not accept any amendment that will make the law constitutional.

Of course, as I said before, if the people who want to hunt and want game preserves, which I suspect are not bad things, want to pay for them, let them pay for them; but I do protest that it is an outrage to require a boy living in Alabama who wants to shoot a duck on a creek in that State to contribute a dollar, to be taken over to my State or down into Florida, or into Louisiana, and there go to purchase a game preserve on which that boy could not go to save his immortal soul without getting into jail, because the State laws will not permit nonresidents to hunt in those States, and the Congress of the United States can not repeal those police powers which States have to preserve the game within their own boundaries by police regulations. Even migratory oysters might be protected by it.

If Senators want to give the Department of Agriculture the power to say that certain lands would be suitable and appropriate and ought to be preserved as public breeding grounds for birds or public shooting grounds, I have no objection to it, and I have no objection to the Congress writing into the law a provision that every man who hunts, or spears a migratory fish, in that ground or digs up a migratory oyster shall pay a license, if a license is so sacred to the Senator from Indiana. But do not make somebody pay for it who never will see it and could not hunt upon it if he were to go there. It is not right, and I do not believe even the Senator from Indiana would indorse it.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas attempts to be facetious.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no; I am awfully serious; my remarks were not intended to be funny.

Mr. NEW. Then the seriousness with which the Senator attacks this proposition is to be commended; but, of course, he misses the point entirely. I said I would not accept that amendment because the acceptance of it would defeat the very point the Senator from Arkansas would so jealously guard. Suppose the amendment were adopted; the bill then would be left in such shape that a man who has not the means to belong to a gun club would have to pay for the privilege of hunting duck, and the man who is rich and can belong to a gun club would be exempt absolutely from the payment of the $1 license. What I hope to do by this bill, Mr. President, is to take the dollar of the man who is fortunate enough to belong to a gun club and make it apply to the purchase or the rental of lands on which the poor devil may go and enjoy what the other man's money gives him the chance to enjoy.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator then accept an amendment that no one shall pay a license fee except he belongs to a gun club?

Mr. NEW. Certainly not.

Mr. CARAWAY. I did not think he would.

Mr. NEW. Certainly not. The operation of the whole bill is simple. I would like to make just as brief a statement as I can to show what I conceive to be the operation of the bill and what it proposes to do. It imposes a license fee of $1 on every man who wants to shoot migratory birds. The Senator from Arkansas speaks of the man who does not shoot and who can not reach the hunting grounds and who will never go to the grounds. Very well; he is not required to pay a license fee. There is no charge against that man.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Would not the man who lived in Indiana, and went out to hunt in Indiana, have to pay a license under the provisions of the bill, even though he never saw a bird preserve?

Mr. NEW. Certainly not.

Mr. CARAWAY. If he wanted to hunt?

Mr. NEW. If he hunted migratory birds, he would have to have a license.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course.

Mr. NEW. But he will not have any migratory birds to hunt unless some means are employed to preserve them.

Mr. CARAWAY. How does the pending bill preserve them?

Mr. NEW. By furnishing grounds where they have opportunity to breed, where they may stop and feed unmolested on their way from Canada to Mexico.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let us amend the bill and give the Government power to establish game preserves, which it already has without the suggested amendment, but not require the man in Indiana who never will see one of them to pay a license when he wants to go out to hunt. That is all I am asking.

Mr. NEW. I hope the Senator will permit me to complete my statement.

Mr. CARAWAY. I shall do so.

Mr. NEW. I have no objection to answering any reasonable question.

As I said, Mr. President, the fact I think is obvious to all who know anything whatever about the game supply of the country, and particularly the migratory birds, that unless something is done to establish places where the birds may light on their migrations between the North and South in spring and fall they will soon be destroyed, simply because there is no place for them to go and because in a few places that remain they are shot without regard to the limits imposed by law or the limits imposed by ordinary sportsmanlike instinct. That is the plain fact about it. The bill is intended for the direct benefit of the man who can not afford to belong to a club.

Now, Mr. President, on that point let me say just a further word. I used to shoot along the Kankakee marshes. I have shot over every foot of them from the rise of that river clear to the Illinois. The day was when anybody could go there and find plenty of places to shoot and plenty of birds at which to shoot. To-day all that land that has not been reclaimed for agricultural purposes has been taken over by clubs. The same thing is absolutely true of marshes along the Illinois River, perhaps the greatest refuge in the world for migratory birds on their trips between Canada and the Gulf. Nearly all of that land has been taken up by clubs. What I want to do is to make the club owners take out a Federal license, costing $1, which is to be paid into the Treasury for the use of the commission in establishing game refuges and preserves.

The bill does not create any salaried commission. The administration of the law is to be under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General, together with two Members of the Senate appointed by the President of the Senate and two Members of the House appointed by the Speaker of the House, who shall serve during their terms of office only, and without any extra compensation.

The bill will save the Government of the United States about $150,000 a year, because the Government now pays about that much money in an effort, which is not altogether successful because it is inadequate, to enforce the provisions of the migratory-bird treaty which we entered into with Canada some years ago. The fees collected under the provisions of the bill would provide funds sufficient to cover all that expenditure and very considerably more. It is entirely a matter of speculation as to how much money would be collected from the sale of the licenses. There are anywhere from 3,000,000 to 7,000,000 hunting licenses issued in the United States each year. Of course that does not mean that they are all for the shooting of migratory birds, but it is a reasonable presumption that a great number of them are taken out by men who hunt ducks and other migratory birds. The provisions of the bill do not apply to fish and do not apply to anything but migratory birds.

I would like to read one or two excerpts from letters which have been written to me and to the gentlemen who are interested in this bill. I would like especially to read one from Arkansas, the State represented in part by the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], who is opposing this measure.

Lee Miles, who is the game commissioner of Arkansas, wrote as follows:

I am very much in favor of this law. I am sure it will meet with the approval of Arkansas sportsmen. I can not understand how a man could be a sportsman and not favor this law.

From Alabama John H. Wallace, now dead, who was one of the very best game commissioners in the country and recognized as such, wrote very enthusiastically in favor of the bill. In fact, he had some voice in drawing the bill.

Representatives of Georgia wrote in the same terms. Both Clyde Matthews, now dead, and Frank Rhodes, who succeeded him, wrote in favor of the passage of the bill.

From Kentucky came this statement:

Let me say that this is exactly the thing we have been looking for down this way, and I hope we can immediately acquire Reel Foot Lake and the wonderful territory adjacent thereto. While the most of Reel Foot Lake is in Tennessee, we feel that we are very much interested in it.

From Maryland Mr. McCormick said:

Of course, you undoubtedly know that I am heartily in favor of this measure.

I am reading now from the South only. From North Carolina Richard H. Lewis, president of the Audubon Society of North Carolina, charged with the enforcement of the game laws there, indorses it enthusiastically.

In Virginia a convention of game wardens adopted the following resolution:

Be it resolved by the Virginia State game wardens in convention assembled, That they heartily sanction the passage of the New-Anthony bill providing for a Federal hunting license to hunt migratory birds.

From West Virginia came the same sort of a statement.

I want to stop here long enough to especially comment on the State of Louisiana. Louisiana adjoins Arkansas. Louisiana did for itself this year what we are trying to do through this bill for the country at large. The State set aside a preserve of 30,000 acres, and I am told by the Senators from Louisiana that it is going to set aside still more, the operation of it is giving such general satisfaction.

Referring to the license, to which the Senator from Arkansas objects, the State of Arkansas right now imposes a license of $1.10 on every man who wants to shoot in Arkansas, whether he wants to shoot migratory birds or whether he wants to shoot migratory rabbits or migratory anything else, and they do not get anything for it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator tell me where he got that wonderful information?

Mr. NEW. I got it as reported to me from the Arkansas statute.

Mr. CARAWAY. As reported to the Senator, it happens to be wrong.

Mr. NEW. I am quite certain that the report is substantially correct.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; it is wrong.

Mr. NEW. They also charge a license fee for fishing. If I, a nonresident of Arkansas, were to go to Arkansas and shoot a migratory bird, I would have to take out a license. The Senator talks about what the citizen of Indiana would have to do to shoot in a public hunting ground. If I as a citizen of Indiana want to shoot duck in Arkansas, the State of Arkansas would charge me $15 for doing it.

Mr. CARAWAY. And in addition to that would put the Senator in jail, because he would not be allowed to do it at all.

Mr. NEW. If an Indiana man went to Arkansas at all, perhaps the Senator feels that they ought to put him in jail anyway. But that is what the Arkansas law provides shall be done to an Indiana man who goes down there to shoot. That is what the State of Arkansas does.

Understand another thing, Senators. The Government, under the provisions of the bill, can not take a single acre of land in Arkansas or in Alabama or in any other State except with the approval of the legislature of that State. No one is going down there to commit any outrage on the State of Arkansas or establish something that the State does not want. If they do not want it, all they have to do is to have their legislature say they do not want it done, and that is the end of it.

Mr. President, I think there are some here who do not take the bill very seriously. I am not one of them. It is a serious matter. It is proposed in good faith. I believe that the general public, not only in this day but in the days that are to come, will derive very great benefit in the form of pleasure, good health, and much that goes to make life enjoyable if we will preserve for them the opportunity to do so. I spoke of what I had seen along the Illinois River and the Kankakee River. I would like to feel that those who are to come after me, a couple of generations behind, are going to have the opportunity to have the same enjoyment out of life that I have had out of mine. That is all there is to it. No bill ever was proposed in better faith than this one, and none with more direct and impartial consideration for the man who can not afford, in a financial way, to put himself in the happy condition where he can enjoy such privileges as nature has provided. That is all there is to it.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHIPPS in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. NEW. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana would he consent to an amendment striking out, on page 2, line 13, the word "farm" before the word "land," so as to read "on any land owned by such person." That would enable a man to hunt on his own land. An amendment already agreed to covers the tenant hunting on the land occupied by him, but I am a little fearful that it is not broad enough to cover a man's woodland if he does not live on it. I therefore move, on page 2, in line 13, before the word "land," to strike out the word "farm."

Mr. SMITH. May I suggest to my colleague as now framed the provision reads "killing any such migratory birds on any farm land owned by such person and occupied by him." I suggest that if the word "and" before the word "occupied" were changed to "or" that would meet the objection.

Mr. DIAL. I have proposed that amendment and it has been agreed to.

Mr. NEW. That change has been made.

Mr. DIAL. I now move to strike out the word "farm" before the word "land."

Mr. SMITH. I do not suppose that this bill will pass; I hope it will not in its present form; but, in case it does, I hope that before its passage it may be framed in as harmless a shape as possible.

Mr. NEW. If I understand the amendment now proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], it is designed to permit a man to shoot upon any land which he may own, whether occupied by him or not, and also to permit his tenant the same privilege?

Mr. DIAL. Yes, sir; whether he occupies it or not it would permit him to hunt on it; and it does not restrict the privilege to farm land, but includes any land.

Mr. NEW. I should hesitate very much about accepting such an amendment without a better opportunity to understand just how far it went.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 13, before the word "land," it is proposed to strike out the word "farm," so that it will read:

Provided, That such license shall not be required to be procured by any person or by any member of his immediate family for the purpose of hunting, pursuing, shooting, capturing, or killing any such migratory bird on any land owned by such person or occupied by him as his place of permanent abode.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I should regard such an amendment as very dangerous, and I do not think I should desire to accept it. I hope it will not prevail.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from South Carolina whether his purpose would not be fulfilled by merely striking out the word "farm"?

Mr. DIAL. That is the word I have moved to strike out.

Mr. SPENCER. Personally I see no objection to that amendment.

Mr. DIAL. That is my motion.

Mr. SPENCER. Do I understand the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina also to include changing the word "and" to the word "or," in the next line?

Mr. DIAL. I have proposed that amendment, and it has already been agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. If the word "farm" be stricken out and the word "or" be written in instead of the word "and," it would permit a man to acquire a million acres of land, which might practically be all the hunting land of a State, and the law thereby would be practically nullified so far as establishing game preserves is concerned. It would vitiate the very purposes of the bill.

Mr. DIAL. The object of substituting the word "or" for the word "and" is to allow a man to hunt on land where he is a tenant but which he does not own.

Mr. SPENCER. On any land which a man owns and occupies he ought to be free to hunt.

Mr. DIAL. Exactly; but he ought to be free to hunt on the land if he owns it although he does not occupy it. Likewise, the tenant ought to be allowed to hunt where he occupies it and does not own it. That is the object of my amendment.

Mr. SPENCER. So long as either the owner or the tenant occupies the land, I agree with the Senator from South Carolina, but if it is intended to open the door so that a man may acquire an indefinite number of acres, as would seem to be contemplated by the amendment proposed by the Senator, I can not agree with him.

Mr. DIAL. That is not my object at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the pending measure has already consumed a great deal of time and, inasmuch as I have some engagements which may call me away before its consideration shall have been completed, I desire to make a brief statement relative to the bill.

With the policy of game conservation I am in hearty sympathy. Any fair and well-considered plan, one calculated to accomplish that end, would meet with my approval, as I believe it would meet with the approval of many other Senators who have indicated a purpose to oppose or who have criticized the bill. It is desirable that game refuges be established, and where that is done that laws should be applicable and should be strictly enforced for the conservation of the game.

The purpose which the Senator from Indiana has in mind and every purpose which ought to be carried out in connection with such legislation at this time, in my humble judgment, can be accomplished by the adoption of the amendment proposed by my colleague the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY]. If it is necessary to secure additional funds, I respectfully suggest to the Senator from Indiana that the license fee which the bill imposes might be increased so as to provide a larger aggregate amount. If shooting grounds shall be established by the Federal Government for the benefit of the public, all true sportsmen, all who come within the class comprehended by that term, will be willing to pay a reasonable and probably a liberal license fee. A sportsman who is to have the benefit of a public institution in the nature of a shooting ground would not object to paying double the small charge proposed by this bill.

The objection to the bill lies in the fact, stated in a word, that it is an extension of Federal authority to a new field. Heretofore the privilege to hunt has been exercised and enjoyed by the American people without Federal restriction or interference. Recently, through treaty and statute, the Federal Government extended its jurisdiction to migratory birds. Every lawyer knows the difficulties which have been encountered and which are involved in such legislation. It will not promote in the long run the purpose of true sportsmen to conserve the game of the country, to protect migratory birds against ruthless destruction, shamefully and outrageously practiced in some instances, to impose regulations and restrictions the result of which can only be to invite and promote resentment among a large number of our citizens.

In the older States there are thousands of men who are not sportsmen, but who occasionally, once or twice a year, indulge in the shooting of migratory birds. They never go upon a game preserve, and I suggest to my colleague they never have the opportunity of doing so. This bill would require every man who for any period of time undertakes to indulge in the American pursuit of hunting to pay a license fee to the Federal Government, and, in the event he should fail to do so, he would become liable to a fine of several hundred dollars and to imprisonment for a long period. If such a restriction is imposed the only result will be that the man who hunts one day in the year, the man who is not a sportsman, who has no ambition to be classed in that way, but who does enjoy and take advantage of the ancient privilege of occasionally engaging in the pursuit of game, will either find himself unexpectedly in trouble by some mischance because he has failed to procure a Federal license or he will totally refrain from indulging in the amusement. It will not only render the proposed statute exceedingly unprofitable and accomplish no beneficial purpose but it will make it exceedingly unpopular.

If it is desired to establish shooting grounds for the benefit of men who indulge in the pursuit of game and who call themselves sportsmen a license is proper, but it is not necessary in order to accomplish that to harass and vex and annoy the large number of citizens who are not sportsmen but who occasionally desire to pursue game.

No sportsman would object to paying $2 for the privilege of going upon a shooting preserve established by the Government of the United States; he would just as lief pay $2 in all probability as $1; but whenever the license provision is made applicable to every man who takes a gun and pursues at any time migratory birds or who, pursuing other game, by chance shoots migratory game, and thus becomes liable to a severe penalty, the proposed statute is rendered unpopular in the beginning; it is made difficult of enforcement and nothing has been accomplished that can be in the mind of the men who have the purpose of promoting legitimate sport in shooting.

I think if the Senator from Indiana will take that view of it, accept the amendment of the junior Senator from Arkansas, and increase the charge for the shooting license to persons who go upon preserves to $2 or even more than that he will succeed in passing the proposed legislation and for the time being at least will have accomplished every legitimate purpose.

Mr. NEW obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. NEW. Does the Senator from South Carolina desire to ask a question?

Mr. SMITH. I merely desire to submit some observations along the line of the remarks just made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. NEW. If the Senator will permit me, I wish to reply very briefly to what the Senator from Arkansas has said. If I could exact a different sum from the man who belonged to a club, the rich man, if you please, than from the poor man, I would be very glad indeed to make the club member's license fee $2 or $5 or even more; but the Senator from Arkansas certainly knows that we could not make the license fee of one citizen a certain amount and the license fee of another citizen a different and lower amount. That is not feasible; it is not possible. It is necessary to make the fee uniform; and I have sought to make it just as low as possible in order to bear as lightly as possible on the man of very small means.

Mr. President, the man who shoots at all and undertakes to hunt migratory birds has to equip himself at least with, we will say, a box of 25 shells, and they will cost him 35 cents more than the proposed license fee for a year will cost him. This $1 license fee is the cheapest investment he can possibly make for his entertainment and pleasure, because 90 cents of every dollar is to be expended for the permanent guaranty to him of a place and an opportunity to enjoy the proceeds of that dollar.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NEW. I do.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Indiana. I have not had an opportunity to examine his bill, but he is familiar with it. He is also familiar with the situation in the State of Ohio. I happen to know that very many of the farmer boys there, especially in the central part of the State, have for their recreation little hunting trips to the shores of Lake Erie. Under the terms of this bill, are these boys required to take out a license?

Mr. NEW. If they are to hunt migratory birds.

Mr. WILLIS. They go duck hunting.

Mr. NEW. Then they are required to buy a $1 license. They are required to buy a license by the State of Ohio, too.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that.

Mr. NEW. This would call for a $1 license.

Mr. WILLIS. An additional license?

Mr. NEW. Yes; the money derived from which is to be invested by this commission for permanently securing public shooting grounds for the benefit of those men. For the licenses which they buy now from Ohio they get nothing except the privilege of shooting. They get no place guaranteed to them.

Mr. WILLIS. Perhaps the Senator has already covered this in his statement, but what is the provision of the bill touching hunting upon ground owned by the person himself?

Mr. NEW. That is exempt.

Mr. WILLIS. That is exempted?

Mr. NEW. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Arkansas has really voiced the sentiment of every man who wants to preserve the game of this country and still keep within the dual form of our Government.

I do not suppose there is a man in this body who has enjoyed hunting, both of migratory birds and those that are local and other game, as I have. In my State they have readily acceded to the terms of the present law and cooperated with the Federal Government under it in closing up and making of short duration what is known as the open season. Especially is that true in reference to the migratory birds, so that the open season for hunting will close before the birds have started their return migration to the North. But the fatal objection to this bill is that you impose a license upon every man who wants to go out and hunt at all in order ultimately to create a preserve where only a few will ever get to hunt.

I agree heartily, as far as I have been able to look into this measure, with the proposition that the Federal Government, if it proposes to exercise any jurisdiction for the preservation of game, ought to acquire domains suitable for the preservation of it and then make such rules and restrictions as they see fit in order to accomplish that purpose.

Down in my State just the other day I took out my annual license for the State—$3 for the State and 10 cents for the party issuing the license—so that our State already is keenly alive to the necessity for the preservation of game birds, both migratory and local. If, in addition to that, for the short period of the open season that I am allowed to hunt I must take out a Federal license in order to shoot migratory birds, it lays a restriction in addition to that already imposed by the State that is going to create confusion, because unless the open season or the time for which the license of the Federal Government applies runs coterminous with that of the State, you will have a man with a license to shoot under certain conditions allowed by the Federal Government and under the laws of his own State not allowed at all.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption? The provisions of this law can not conflict with those of the State law. It so states.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, even though the terms of the bill provide that the State law shall govern the terms of the license under the Federal law, it still remains true that a citizen of the State, for the length of time that he would be permitted the scant opportunity that he has, should not be restricted by the Federal Government in addition to his own local government.

If the Federal Government desires to preserve the game, I think the part of the Senator's bill which provides for obtaining through any legitimate means Government preserves where they can have a perpetual closed season, or where they can have a license fee and limit the bag or limit the number of animals that may be killed, is admirable; but to go into a State and lay down rules by which a man who owns land has to go to the Federal Government in order to exercise the immemorial right of picking up his gun and shooting a wild goose or a duck is to bring the law into such disrepute that you would defeat the very end that is now meeting universal approbation through the cooperation of the State with the Federal Government.

Mr. NEW. Of course, if the Senator will again permit me, the bill does not do anything of the kind. It does not apply to a man shooting on his own ground.

Mr. SMITH. But it requires a Federal license.

Mr. NEW. Not for shooting on his own ground.

Mr. SMITH. I know, but it requires a Federal license for a citizen of the State who happens to be unfortunate enough not to own any land to shoot on my land. He has to get a license to shoot, and then he has to get permission from me to go on my land and shoot; and the consequence is that the landowner is exempted under this bill, and the man who goes on a navigable stream the riparian rights of which may be owned by the State, and it is no man's land—and that is about the only privilege some of them have of ever getting a chance to shoot without asking permission, or going on posted land——

Mr. NEW. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. NEW. The Senator said, just a moment ago, that the State of South Carolina now charges $3 for a license for any man who wants to shoot in South Carolina, a resident of the State.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. NEW. What does it give him for it?

Mr. SMITH. It gives him the privilege of going out during that time and shooting under certain restrictions.

Mr. NEW. All right. Does it provide any place for him where he can shoot?

Mr. SMITH. It simply creates that fund in order to carry out the provisions of the open season, and the amount of game that may be killed. It is an attempt on the part of my State to conserve the game within the State, and the game wardens necessarily have to be paid, and those who want something to shoot are willing to pay for the preservation of the thing to shoot.

Mr. NEW. All right. This bill charges that man $1, and practically half of that dollar goes for the establishment of a place for game to multiply and on which that man can shoot. You charge him $3 and it is all right. You are against charging him $1 for something that is meant for his direct benefit.

Mr. SMITH. But the thing I am objecting to is the Federal Government undertaking to license a citizen of a State for the purpose of permitting him to enjoy the thing that is his right without the interference of the Federal Government. I think that if the Senator wants to encourage the purchase by the United States Government of domains suitable for the preservation of game, he will find all the cooperation in this body that he desires; but when he goes into the doubtful ground of having a citizen of a State compelled under a statute to go and take out a license before he can shoot within his own State, he will have a rocky road to travel. It is my opinion that the Senator will meet every end by confining himself to the purchase by the Federal Government of domains where it can properly and constitutionally exercise its rights in regulation and limitation.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the difficulty with the statement of the Senator from South Carolina, as I see it, is this: We agree perfectly that if something is not done to preserve the migratory birds of this Nation their number will constantly diminish. There must be places where they can be protected during the closed season, and there must be places where they can live and breed and grow in number. Last year we appropriated $154,900 for that purpose, and with some difficulty. It is absolutely inadequate. If the Federal Government does not do something to provide feeding and breeding places for these birds, and to provide for their protection, they will become more and more nearly extinct. Who better can share in that cost than those who have the direct benefit of shooting and eating those migratory birds?

There are 6,000,000 people in the United States who hunt, as far as the statistics show, who are directly interested in the keenness of the sport of shooting game. What does this bill say? It says that the Federal Government will locate in different parts of the country great safeguarding preserves to take care of these migratory birds, and that they shall be open to any man who has a Government license, and that the fund derived from those Government licenses shall take care of these breeding and safeguarding places. What is the amount of the Government license? It is $1 a year.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will allow me, my observation is that the migratory birds par excellence down in my section are the ducks. For some reason the geese have ceased to come, perhaps for the same reason that the ducks began to get fewer; but my information—and I have given some little study to the matter—is that the thing that is diminishing the flocks is the inroads upon their breeding grounds. They do not breed in the South. They breed up in the Arctic or approximately the frozen regions. There has come to me information as to their eggs being sought for divers commercial purposes, and that they have been destroyed by the millions through that process.

I think that if we would start at this thing right and preserve the breeding grounds inviolate, so far as the number is concerned that may be destroyed through the limited open season that now obtains in almost all the States, we would have a rehabilitation of all of our still living migratory birds; but I do not think you will accomplish anything of consequence by attempting to require the taking out of a license to prevent the shooting of migratory birds under the present condition of the State laws. I am informed, however, that a scientific investigation has been made, and that it is the inroads upon the breeding places that have caused the rapid diminution of the number of our migratory birds, particularly the geese and the ducks. Anything that I could do or that any real sportsman could do to preserve the breeding grounds in the closed season we stand ready to do, or I do, at least; but the open season in most of the States is being so restricted that the number of migratory birds that are destroyed would hardly have any appreciable effect, especially if the breeding places were protected.

Mr. SPENCER. We have a good deal of jurisdiction, but it would be difficult to regulate the breeding places anywhere around the Arctic Ocean. As a matter of fact, the great danger to those birds is when they are shot, not alone in the breeding places, or when their eggs are destroyed—of course any disturbance there is a direct detriment—but the main injury, as I take it from the information I have, is when those birds begin to mate. They mate in the Southland, they mate on their journey north, and the mating birds are shot if there is not a closed season, and it is for the protection of those birds that the closed season is provided and the safeguards are thrown around them by Federal legislation. The Senator and I are quite in accord as to the absolute necessity of preserving these migratory birds. What better things could be done than for the Government to say, "We will establish great central developing places for these birds, and we will call upon those who hunt to cooperate with us"? This would produce a fund estimated at between one and three million dollars a year.

Who is complaining? I am familiar with a good many hunters' organizations, and certainly there is not one in Missouri in which the members are not keen for just such a system of preservation as is indicated by this bill.

The game wardens of every State are for it. They might be said to be interested because it dovetails into their plans, but there is not one of the individual hunter's organizations of the States, made up of the rank and file of men who love to hunt, that is not in favor of it. Why should they not be, in these days when you and I see individual preserves of land, marsh, and swamp being gathered together, into which nobody can come except by invitation of the owner? Why should we not have under Government control great stretches of the swamp land and water land and other land where these migratory birds can come and live and be protected, which shall, in the open season, be available to any man who wants to come? That is one of the very things this bill proposes to accomplish.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will allow me, so far as the feature for the purchase of land to be under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government is concerned, I am in favor of it; but I am opposed to licensing the individual hunters within the States, as interfering with the police power and the sovereignty of the States. In addition to that, you would tax every man who takes up his gun and goes out to hunt for a day or two, as has been pointed out here this afternoon. You would tax them all to create a preserve of which only the regular professional sportsman could ever get the benefit.

Mr. SPENCER. But the birds which are safeguarded in the preserves do not stop there. There may be a comparatively few who could hunt in the preserve to which the Senator refers, but the birds scatter over the whole United States and the hunters everywhere have the advantage of it.

Mr. SMITH. If the Federal Government desires to establish places where it may preserve these migratory birds, I stand ready to cooperate in every way, except by agreeing that the Federal Government may go into my State and dictate that I and the other citizens must get licenses in order to hunt migratory birds within the State.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NEW. The Senator from South Carolina spoke of the establishment and the preservation of breeding grounds, or refuges, and said that if that was the purpose, he would be in harmony with the bill. That is exactly the purpose.

Mr. President, some years ago the United States and Canada negotiated what is known as the migratory-bird treaty. As is well known, migratory birds for the most part summer in Canada. They breed in the British possessions—some of them in the Northern States of this Union, to be sure—but most of them across the Canadian line.

The obligations which Canada assumed under the migratory-bird treaty was to preserve the birds up there by stopping the wholesale gathering of eggs, which was spoken of by the Senator from South Carolina, by keeping inviolate the breeding grounds which are used by the birds in Canada; and to the credit of our neighbor on the north I want to say that she does what she usually does with reference to a promise—she has kept it—and the breeding grounds there are preserved. The unlawful gathering of eggs has been stopped, and there is no country I know of where the laws regulating all matters of that kind are better enforced than they are right now in Canada.

The Senator said that the number of birds destroyed in any one State here is negligible. There were 2,000,000 ducks killed in the State of Minnesota in one single shooting season three or four years ago. I have forgotten whether it was in 1919 or 1920, but it was about that time. Two million ducks, at a dollar apiece, amount to $2,000,000 worth of a food supply, because ducks are a very valuable food supply, and that many were shot in the single State of Minnesota. While I am not able to speak for the numbers, and can not give them accurately, I venture to say that there are almost as many shot each year in the Senator's own State of South Carolina. I know residents of New York and residents of Indiana who are in his State now shooting migratory birds, men who have bought places there. They are not taxed for the privilege. They are down there shooting the migratory game. I can tell who they are if required to do so; but I simply say I know them, and I know they are there now and have been for some seasons past. They do not pay one cent for the benefit of the man who lives in South Carolina and wants to shoot there. He is kept off of their grounds, and he never will get a chance to shoot on their grounds, because they are privately owned, and they have the same rights of property there that any man enjoys.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the amendment.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	George	Moses	Smoot
Ball	Glass	Nelson	Spencer
Bayard	Harreld	New	Sterling
Borah	Harris	Norbeck	Sutherland
Brandegee	Harrison	Norris	Swanson
Brookhart	Heflin	Overman	Townsend
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Page	Trammell
Capper	Kendrick	Pepper	Wadsworth
Caraway	Keyes	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Ladd	Pittman	Warren
Dial	La Follette	Pomerene	Weller
Dillingham	Lenroot	Ransdell	Williams
Ernst	Lodge	Sheppard	Willis
Fernald	McKellar	Shields
Fletcher	McNary	Smith

Mr. FERNALD. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is absent on official business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the amendment to the amendment be reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state it for the information of the Senate.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 13, the Senator from South Carolina proposes to strike out the word "farm," before the word "land," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That such license shall not be required to be procured by any person or by any member of his immediate family for the purpose or hunting, pursuing, shooting, capturing, or killing any such migratory bird on any land owned by such person or occupied by him as his place of permanent abode.

Mr. NEW. So far as I can do so, I am willing to accept the amendment to the amendment. I shall not object to its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported.

The READING CLERK. Add a new section to be known as section 13a, as follows:

SEC. 13a. No public lands shall be withdrawn, set apart, or reserved for or as public shooting grounds or for a bird or game refuge by Executive order or otherwise than by express act of Congress.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, under the provisions of the bill the President of the United States would have authority to withdraw by his own act any amount of public lands for the purposes of the bill. He could withdraw all of the public lands of the West for this purpose. It was found necessary a few years ago for Congress to take away from the Executive the power to withdraw land for forest reserves. It was provided that the forest-reserve lands could only be withdrawn by express act of Congress. That act became necessary by reason of the foolish withdrawal of millions of acres of land for alleged timber purposes.

I am heartily in favor of the purpose of the bill. I want to see game refuges created all over the country or wherever they should be created.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. But I am unwilling to take a chance on any one man having the power, without the approval of Congress, to withdraw unlimited quantities of public lands in my State.

I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. I, of course, have no idea that any President would ever set aside the lands in the manner described and objected to by the Senator from Nevada, but I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment which he has offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported.

The READING CLERK. In section 4, page 3, in line 3, after the first word "That," insert:

Annually on June 30 the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay over to each of the States 50 per cent of all moneys received from the sale of such licenses collected within such States, to be covered into the State school fund of the States, respectively, and 50 per cent of—

So as to make the sentence read:

That annually on June 30 the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay over to each of the States 50 per cent of all moneys received from the sale of such licenses collected within such States, to be covered into the State school fund of the States, respectively, and 50 per cent of all moneys received from the sale of such licenses shall be covered into the Treasury—

And so forth.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I think the purpose and object of the amendment is very plain, but I will state that the object is that of the funds collected from licenses 50 per cent shall be appropriated back to the States from which collected. I think it very proper that action should be taken toward the conservation of our game, and I would rather assist than oppose a proper measure to such end. It was a new departure a few years ago when the Federal Government set about to regulate and control the migratory birds. The trend seems to be to progress step by step. First we acted upon the treaty of 1916, when we enacted Federal legislation for the purpose of controlling and regulating migratory birds and giving Federal authority over hunting in the States. It has been amazing and astonishing to see the scope of the definition given the term "migratory birds." No one scarcely knows the magnitude of the definition. It is being extended more and more. I am told that the term now includes doves and robins.

Now another progressive step as proposed by this bill is to make the game proposition a revenue producer to the Federal Government. The plan being adopted is a license tax. That seems to be very largely the object and purpose of the bill. Of course I know it is claimed and contended that it is for the purpose of game conservation, the establishment of hunting grounds and game preserves, and that in order to accomplish this a license tax must be imposed. If we are going to trespass upon State rights by collecting license from every hunter who shoots a migratory bird and thus raise revenue, I think in all justice that part of that fund should be reappropriated to the States. I have offered the amendment providing that 50 per cent of the fund thus collected should be returned to the States and placed in the school funds of the States, respectively, which are entitled to it under such provision.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator explain how this would trespass upon the rights of the States?

Mr. TRAMMELL. The matter of a Federal license for people to hunt within the State is a new departure entirely. They do not hunt at random all over the United States. They are not issued a Federal license allowing them to hunt anywhere, but they are confined within the limits of a State and enjoy the privileges of that State, the police protection of the State. They are under no police protection from the Federal Government. Yet we say if they go hunting within a State the Federal Government will monopolize the privilege of licensing them. This bill means that every man who hunts will be forced to obtain not only a State license but also a United States license.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it the Senator's view that the provisions of the bill would enable a nonresident to hunt in a State without a license from the State and without permission from the State?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Oh, no; certainly not. There is nothing I have said that would logically permit any such deduction.

Mr. LENROOT. Then how does it trespass upon any State rights?

Mr. TRAMMELL. It is an interference with a prerogative of the States to raise revenue from this particular source, which has always been left to the States, and also an encroachment upon the police powers of the States.

Mr. LENROOT. The States would still raise revenue from the same source.

Mr. TRAMMELL. But it is evidently an effort to reach around and try to find avenues for revenue in every possible direction.

Mr. LENROOT. But this is not a revenue measure.

Mr. TRAMMELL. It is proposed to tax the people of the State, at least every man who hunts even for a half day or a day, to the extent of $1, and then it is proposed to take a part of that money to build up game preserves and shooting fields upon which the sportsman may hunt. That seems to be the idea and purpose of the bill. What percentage of the average citizen will ever get to hunt on the game preserves or shooting grounds you propose to establish? Not one in five thousand, is my opinion.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it the Senator's view that in the State of Florida he does not desire protection of migratory birds?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have not said or intimated anything of the kind. I have not intimated that I think we should not have game conservation, but have expressed myself to the contrary. But we may adopt different courses by which we can bring about that regulation. I am not in favor of the idea of the Federal Government again reaching out its arms trying to get revenues here, there, and every place. It is proposed now to raise two or three million dollars by taxing the people for hunting.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. Is it the contention of the Senator that the pending measure is intended to be a revenue measure? My understanding of it was that the income from this source was to be used entirely in the establishment of sanctuaries for the protection of migratory game birds.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Take either horn of the dilemma; it does not make any difference. If it is proposed to raise money by a license tax upon everybody who hunts for the purpose of building game preserves and hunting fields for the sportsmen of the country to hunt upon, then it would seem to me to be an effort to save money from general appropriations by raising it in this way to build up the game reserves for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator does not contend that this is intended to be a revenue measure, does he?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not know what it is intended to be. I suppose it is probably intended to be a revenue measure to a certain extent. I would not call it a revenue measure in the nature of a general revenue tax, such as your tariff bill, which taxes everything on the face of the earth. The Senator is not satisfied with what has been exacted under the tariff bill by the imposition of taxes upon the people of the country, but now wants to depart a little further and go into the States and say, "We will impose a tax upon the man who hunts, additional to that imposed by the State." I think the matter of the regulation of a license tax upon huntsmen should be left to the State. That is my frank and honest opinion in regard to it. The Federal Government, as it has already done, can proceed with the enforcement of its laws relative to migratory birds, but do not go into the States and interfere with the question of hunting licenses. I think that should be left to the States, just as it is at present. The matter of imposing a license regulation and control should be left to the State.

I hope the amendment will be agreed to. If that can not be done, then I say in all justice that the State from which the revenue is to come is entitled to a distribution of at least 50 per cent of it. I have proposed my amendment so that if the bill is enacted into law the State will get back a little part of the revenue which I think should remain in the State instead of being shifted into the Federal Treasury for the purpose of supporting more bureaus, for the purpose of supporting more appointees and employees, and having a lot more people feasting at the public crib. If you are going to have that kind of feasting proposition, send a little of it back to the States from which it came.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President——

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. May I ask the Senator from Florida why he thinks that any of the tax that is proposed to be levied upon those who shoot ducks should go back to the school fund of a State? The purpose was to get revenue which would protect migratory birds. I can see the logic of a proposition that it should go back to the game protection fund of the State.

Mr. TRAMMELL. It is just as broad as it is long in a way, but the school fund is the best fund of a State, and it was always my policy when a State officer to divert everything possible to the school fund. This is merely following out a habit of mine. When we enacted the game law in our State I advocated that a certain percentage of it should go to the rural-school fund. It was of quite a little assistance to the schools. I do not know of anything better than to place funds of this character, derived in this way, into the State school funds.

Mr. SPENCER. Of course, the Senator will see that that absolutely tends to kill the bill—by a gentle process, it is true, but it kills it just the same—because the purpose of the bill is to provide a fund to increase the number of migratory birds and to safeguard their breeding places and their assembling places. If we take away from that fund the license proposed, which is the sole source of the fund, of course the whole object of the bill would be defeated.

Mr. TRAMMELL. It would only take away 50 per cent of it, and then there would be a million or two million dollars a year with which these bureaus which are to administer it and the officers who are to participate in the expenditure could proceed as they chose and have a good healthy fund to use in developing such preserves.

Mr. SPENCER. But if you cut a man in two his chances of life are not very good.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

Mr. NEW. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word with reference to the pending amendment. As the bill now stands there is no purpose in it of raising revenue except as it is incidental to the purpose of the bill, which is the preservation of migratory birds. If the amendment of the Senator from Florida is adopted the bill does clearly become a revenue measure. If his amendment be adopted, the Senator from Florida will kill the bill, because the Senate, as every Senator knows, can not under the Constitution originate revenue measures. Now, will not the Senator from Florida be frank about it and say he wishes to kill the bill by his amendment? Is it not better if we are going to kill the bill to kill it openly and frankly by a vote when we reach that stage in its consideration? I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may, I wish to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question. The Senator has properly stated the fact when he has said that the bill is only incidentally for revenue purposes; but there will be a given amount of revenue raised under the bill, and if that is only an incidental purpose, why is that incidental purpose destroyed simply because the fund may be divided in two?

Mr. LENROOT. Because when the fund is divided in two and one-half of the fund is devoted to an object which has no connection with the purpose of the bill, which is the protection of migratory birds, and one-half of the revenue is put into the Treasury for a general purpose, I am sure the Senator from Ohio will agree with me that it becomes a revenue bill. If we say that one-half of the amount derived shall be paid to the States for school purposes, the bill would thereby lose its character as providing revenue purely incidentally to carrying out the purpose of the bill, and would become to that extent a measure for general revenue purposes.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I disagree with the Senator from Wisconsin. I do not think the amendment would have the effect as contended at all. We find that in section 4 the bill provides—

> That all moneys received from the sale of such licenses shall be covered into the Treasury and shall constitute a special fund—

And so on. Then the bill provides different methods by which the fund may be disposed of. I merely seek to provide an additional method of disposition of the fund. I do not think that that would make the bill come within the purview of a revenue measure unless it already be a revenue measure. My purpose and object in offering the amendment is entirely sincere, for I feel that if we adopt the policy proposed to be carried forward in the bill certainly the fund should be apportioned in the way which I propose.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator from Florida a question?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Where does the Senator find the distinction in the Constitution that if money be used to protect a rabbit it is constitutional, but if it be used to protect a child it is unconstitutional?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have not discovered that.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am curious to know how such a distinction may be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is absent on account of important business at home.

Mr. CARAWAY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], and let my vote stand.

Mr. SHIELDS. I inquire if the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). He has not.

Mr. SHIELDS. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I inquire whether the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. ERNST (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. WATSON (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]; and

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—19.

Ashurst	Harris	Pomerene	Swanson
Caraway	Heflin	Ransdell	Trammell
Dial	McKellar	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
Fletcher	Overman	Shields	Walsh, Mont.

So Mr. TRAMMELL'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I move to strike out all after the word "person" on line 10, page 2, down to and including the word "abode," in line 15, and to insert the words "except those who shall hunt on a public shooting ground or Government game preserve."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not in order, as the amendment is to an amendment which has been agreed to.

Mr. CARAWAY. As I understand, the vote by which the original amendment was agreed to was reconsidered, and that amendment has never been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am sure that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] offered an amendment to that amendment a few moments ago, and there has been no vote on agreeing to the amendment as amended. The amendment of the Senator from South Carolina was to strike out the word "farm."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recalls putting the motion.

Mr. NEW. That is correct, and the record so shows.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Of course the Senator from Arkansas may move to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment as amended was agreed to for the purpose of offering the amendment I have suggested. I have been discussing an amendment to the amendment and I was positive that the amendment as amended had not been finally disposed of.

Mr. NEW. The record will show that the amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am sure that the Senator from Indiana will have no objection to my offering the amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. NEW. If it is another amendment I shall not object.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is another amendment. I am trying to make that clear.

Mr. SMOOT. Does it relate to the word "farm"?

Mr. CARAWAY. It has nothing to do with the word "farm."

Mr. NEW. That amendment was adopted. Why does the Senator want to have the vote reconsidered and have it adopted over again?

Mr. CARAWAY. My amendment has nothing to do with the word "farm." I have given notice that I was going to offer the amendment which I now propose. I have been sitting here all the time, and I do not know when the amendment as amended was agreed to, although I recall when the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina as to the word "farm" was adopted. I am asking now to be permitted to offer this amendment: After the word "person," on line 10, strike out all down to and including the word "abode," on line 15, and insert "except those who shall hunt on a public shooting ground or Government preserve," which would make the sentence read:

That such license shall not be required to be procured by any person except those who shall hunt on a public shooting ground or Government preserve.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the Senate adopted the amendment as amended shall be considered as reconsidered.

Mr. NEW. I shall object to that, Mr. President.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then I will move, Mr. President, to reconsider the amendment, so that I may offer this amendment.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, of course I have no objection to the Senator offering any amendment that he has in mind to offer. I am not seeking to obstruct that. I do not want anything to be done which amounts to undoing what has already been done; that is all. We have made progress. If it is necessary to reconsider this amendment in order to permit the Senator to offer any other amendment, I shall not object.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is very kind of the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; the Senator from Indiana withdrew his objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator withdraw his objection?

Mr. NEW. I withdrew my objection to the reconsideration of the vote by which the paragraph as amended was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Arkansas proposes, on page 2, line 10, to strike out of the amendment heretofore agreed to the following words:

or by any member of his immediate family for the purpose of hunting, pursuing, shooting, capturing, or killing any such migratory bird on any land owned by such person or occupied by him as his place of permanent abode.

And insert the following words:

except those who shall hunt on a public shooting ground or game preserve.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, the amendment as offered leaves every provision of the bill with reference to the acquiring and maintaining of hunting preserves and breeding grounds that the bill now contains. It gives them everything that is asked for in the bill except the right to require a license upon the part of those who never will go upon the game preserves for the purpose of hunting.

I want to say to the Senator from Indiana that I shall have no objection to his bill if the amendment shall be adopted. I am perfectly willing that the Government shall have the authority to establish shooting preserves to protect the wild migratory game of this country. In my own State there are some already established. I have no objection to them. There are other grounds that are sought to be converted into bird preserves to care for migratory birds. I am entirely willing that that shall be done. I am only asking that the man who never will go upon one shall not be specially taxed for the purpose of purchasing and maintaining a preserve upon which he never will be permitted to hunt.

It is not sportsmanlike, if I may be permitted to say it—and that has gotten to be a term much used in this debate—to tax a boy, I will say, in Georgia who wants to go out with a single-barreled shotgun and shoot game in Georgia in season under the Government regulations, to create a fund to buy a bird preserve in my State for the sportsmen in my State to hunt migratory birds. Let the man who is to enjoy the benefit of it pay for it.

I have no objection to bird preserves. I have tried to make that exceedingly plain. I have no objection to any provision of the bill except the annoyance incident to it, and the expense of taxing people for a privilege they never enjoy. It is a matter of just common fairness. It is little, but here is what happens: When a question becomes too small to argue about, it is just the kind of a question to become angry about; and it does not seem to me right to tax every man everywhere who may want to enjoy for 15 minutes what heretofore has been considered an American citizen's right to hunt in his own community, and require him first to procure a Federal license, and if he should hunt ignorantly, or should otherwise fail to do it, he may be arrested and fined $500 and be imprisoned in the county jail for six months, or both, for exercising a right that he believes we got with the very Declaration of Independence.

I want to preserve the wild life of this country, though I am not a hunting man. I am not like the Senator from Indiana, and I am sorry that I am not. He enjoys hunting. I used to hunt, but the time, the opportunity, and the means have been taken from me and I do not hunt. I want to see something of the wild life preserved for our children that are to come after us; but I do not want to perpetrate an injustice and make every man feel that we have perpetrated an injustice upon him by requiring him to contribute to a fund to build up a public shooting ground that he never will see, and that he could not use if he could see it.

I do not question the intention of the Senator from Indiana to be absolutely fair about this matter, because I know he wants to be fair about it. Whatever I said to the contrary a while ago was facetious. I know he wants to be accurate also. I know that somebody has given him a lot of misinformation. For instance, he undertook to say what the hunting law of my own State is, and he is not well informed, but that is no reflection on him. At one time I used to be "persecuting attorney" in that district—that is what they called me—and I got everybody that plead guilty while I was in office. I remember that at one time we had almost every city official from Senator SPENCER'S home city in the toils as nonresident hunters. It was more profitable for the country constables to hunt nonresident hunters than it was to hunt other wild game in that country. I remember that the coroner of St. Louis fell twice into my tender mercies and paid a fine each time.

The State has a right under its police power to regulate the privilege of taking game within the State. Nearly every State has exercised that police power to regulate the taking of wild game. My State has undertaken to do it. Many changes have been made in it from time to time. At one time a few counties permitted nonresidents to hunt provided they pay for a license. Other counties did not permit them to hunt at all; and the Senator said that if a man chased a migratory rabbit in my State he paid for a license for the privilege. Why, every negro in Arkansas knows that is not so, because that is a regular occupation of theirs, and they never on earth paid for a license for it and they never will. No legislature has been quite so silly in my State as to want to tax a negro a dollar for running a rabbit.

The Federal Government is certainly interfering with the rights of a citizen when it goes as far as this. It met with very general condemnation when the treaty between this country and Canada gave to the Congress what it thought was the constitutional power to enact a Federal game law which gave to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to prescribe the times and places under which and where a hunter might hunt migratory birds. It has been to a certain extent accepted, although there is considerable objection to it now, because it frequently happens, and it does now in the rice belt in my own State, that the time when you may hunt a migratory bird is the time when the migratory bird is somewhere else. You have an open season to hunt, but when you are hunting the bird is already in Canada; you do not have much luck gunning for a bird in a rice field in Arkansas when it is already back on the lakes in northern Canada. Now, however, in addition to this, you want to say that every farm boy—and I happen to have been one at one time—shall, before he can hunt in his immediate locality, go to the postmaster and pay a license fee of $1 and get a license to hunt, and after he shall have gotten his license he is then threatened with all kinds of pains and penalties. If his twin brother hunts on his license, both of them are likely to go to jail for six months, and their right to hunt at all is taken away from them. The bill is full of this kind of annoying things.

All I want you to do—and let us be sportsmen if you talk about sportsmen—is to say that the man who gets the right to hunt shall pay for it. If you do not want to go to the Public Treasury and get appropriations to buy outright hunting preserves or preserves where the migratory bird may hatch its young and have its resting places, let us let the man who is going to hunt where the money is to be expended pay for it. That is all I want done in this bill, and if you will accept that amendment I shall offer no objection to the bill being passed.

I want to appeal to the Senators who have the power to vote "yes" or "no" just to say whether it is good sportsmanship to say: "We are going to tax a boy who hunts a few days." You say: "It is only a dollar." I suspect that there are Senators sitting here on the floor who can recall the time when a dollar was a considerable sum to them. I hunted a little once. I am sure that my entire hunting outfit was not worth $1.25. I do not think it cost that much, and yet it was all that I could afford, and if you had added the license fee I should have been denied the privilege. Beyond that, however, is the annoyance, the petty littleness of taxing everybody for this right to hunt in his own locality.

As I said before, when a thing is too small to argue about it is the size to get angry about. There has been more discontent aroused against Governments, more men have destroyed their reputations by doing little things about which people could not argue and could grow angry, than by doing big things. A big question is always a question that people can argue about, but you can not argue about the petty little thing of taking a dollar away from every boy who hopes to have the privilege of hunting, and putting it into a preserve that he never will see and never can see.

The Senator from Indiana says this is a poor man's bill. That may be true, but it is awfully hard to make a man think he has been made rich by taking his money away from him. You never will make anybody follow that logic. I know that it is not sound. I believe, however, that the Senator from Indiana thinks it is.

He talks about the rich man who can belong to a gun club. This does not take away his exclusive right to belong to a hunting club. It does not give the poor man the right, after he has paid his license fee, to go on the rich man's hunting club grounds; it does not give him a single right he does not now have. It just adds an additional burden.

I want to let the bill stand with everyone of its provisions, to establish breeding grounds and bird refuges, resting places when the birds travel from the North to the South and from the South to the North again. Let us have them; but let us either have the Federal Government bear the expense or have the man who is going to hunt upon the preserve bear it.

Many of my friends hunt on a game preserve in my State, and they are willing to pay what would be reasonable for the privilege. I am perfectly willing to commit them in their absence to pay the fee. I am willing to have the Federal license increased, if it is desired, for those who take advantage of the provisions of this bill. But let us not tax the man who can not take advantage of its provisions.

The Senator from Indiana tried to be facetious and said that if he should go to Arkansas they would put him in jail because he was a Republican. I think that would be a good ground for doing it. But they would not imprison him for that cause.

On Big Lake, in Mississippi County, Ark., there is a game preserve. I owned part of the land that lies along that lake. Yet there is no provision in this law, or in any other law, which would let the Senator from Indiana hunt upon it.

Let us be reasonable about this. Let the Senator accept the amendment, that nobody shall pay except one who shall get the benefit, and there will be no objection to the bill.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas proceeds upon the theory of the man out West, that there is no good Indian but a dead Indian. He wants to kill this bill by the adoption of an amendment which would just as effectually kill it as a majority vote against it on the final passage. There can be no public hunting grounds until after the license is provided and the money thereby raised paid for the establishment of that hunting ground, and here is an amendment providing that no license need be taken out except by the man who shoots on the public shooting ground, which is equivalent to saying that you can only collect it from the man who goes to some place which does not exist and which will never exist until after money is provided by that means.

That is all there is to the amendment. It simply means the death of the bill. Of course I hope it will not prevail.

Mr. CARAWAY. I should be perfectly willing to support an amendment the Senator might suggest. Of course he did not intend to be mistaken about it, but there is an appropriation of $50,000, is there not, which is to be refunded?

Mr. NEW. That will operate in this way: The Government provides $50,000 to start this thing, which is to be repaid to the Government in 10 annual installments. The $50,000 is not intended for the purchase of land. The $50,000 will go for the printing of licenses and getting the machinery in motion to start this project. The $50,000 is not to go toward the purchase of land.

The Senator speaks with reference to a man having to go to the post office to get his license. The post office is named because I can conceive of no more convenient place for the man to go. There is a post office accessible to practically everybody in the United States, and the man could even get his license through the rural carrier, if he lives off on a rural route, without going to the post office proper. The post office is named because it was thought that would suit the convenience of the man who wants to take the license out.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I did not complain about the provision naming the post office as the place where the license could be procured; but the Senator is in error about anyone getting the license from the rural carrier. Of course, it may be that if a man found a duck on a creek in Indiana he would have time to saddle his mule and go to the post office 20 miles away and get a license and come back and find the duck there. The chances are, however, that the duck would be gone. I am not sure you could charm him, under the joy of being shot by a licensee, to wait until the man could get a license and come back and gun him. I say that because it is just as consistent as what the Senator said—that there is no way to put this into operation. The Senator says the $50,000 is for the printing of licenses. That is not what the bill provides. That is merely a supposition of the Senator from Indiana. But I am perfectly willing to vote for this bill if the Senator will strike out the $50,000 and put in $100,000 or $200,000, or whatever he thinks is a reasonable amount to start his law into operation. However, I suspect he will find that most of the bird preserves that will be established under the bill are on land already Government owned, against which there will be no charge at all. The Senator was in error in saying there are no bird preserves. The only bird preserves I know of are those on lands which were Government lands and which have been set aside for that purpose. There are millions of acres which it is now expected will be used for that purpose. I do not think there is a single acre in contemplation of purchase, because the kind of preserves they want are those lands which are not suitable for cultivation. Wild migratory birds follow watercourses, and therefore the lands are not privately owned, at least not those in my State and in Louisiana and many other places with which I have some little acquaintance. But make your appropriation whatever you think is necessary. It is infinitely fairer to tax everybody, if you are going to levy a tax to protect wild life. It is said that this is not to give the sportsman the joy of hunting but to preserve wild life. It is infinitely better that you should preserve it by a uniform tax than by a little tax, which will annoy everybody.

My amendment would not kill the bill. I hope the bill will die unless the amendment shall prevail.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, there should not be any misunderstanding about the fatal effect of the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas if it were to prevail. The Senator from Arkansas makes it perfectly clear that there must be no license exacted of any man except of those who avail themselves of the shooting ground and the public preserves. There are no shooting grounds and there are no public preserves in existence now; therefore there can be no licenses collected. The only way by which the public preserves and the shooting grounds are to be accomplished in the future is out of the money collected from these licenses, and if licenses are issued only to those who occupy or use something which does not exist, obviously there never will be any fund created and there never will be any shooting ground.

The Senator from Arkansas has either sent to jail or fined so many public officials from my own State—and I have no doubt about the fact that they go down into Arkansas precisely as he says—that I would like to ask if that was not because the law of Arkansas provides that any resident of Arkansas who wants to hunt deer, bear, or turkey must pay $1.10, and any nonresident who wants to hunt, irrespective of what he hunts, has to pay $15? I have an idea that our public officials came down there and did not pay the $15, and the Senator from Arkansas punished them for it.

The Senator is also in error about this amendment killing the bill. There are public hunting grounds, though perhaps not of the kind provided here, because Big Lake is a public game preserve. The Senator shakes his head. Does he take issue with that?

I do not know that lake, but I am sure there are no public hunting grounds or game preserves such as are contemplated in this bill, and such as are mentioned in the Senator's amendment, in existence now.

Mr. CARAWAY. They are in existence. This is what I wanted to say to the Senator from Missouri. Of course, the amendment would not kill the bill. Let the Senator write into the bill whatever sized appropriation he thinks is fair and necessary to establish a shooting ground, and then provide that every dollar that shall come from the licensing of hunters who go upon it shall be returned to the Public Treasury to reimburse this fund. It would not kill the bill, and we should not want to pass it by some statement that is not quite accurate. It is not my intention to kill the bill. I say frankly that I should like to see game preserves established. I want to see wild life preserved. I would like to see my State legislature very much restrict the right to kill game in that State, and I hope it will do it. I want to see the wild life preserved for our children who come after us. But let us do it without harassing everybody to death. Make the appropriation whatever is thought fair and reasonable to establish the game preserves, and then provide that every dollar that shall be paid by a licensee who goes upon the preserves shall be used—just as is provided here—for policing the preserve, and building shelters, and that the rest shall go back to the Federal Government. I would be perfectly willing to support that sort of an amendment.

Mr. SPENCER. The bill ought to produce between a million and three million dollars, and obviously an appropriation of that size, even to be reimbursed from the licenses, would be very difficult to secure. I defer very much to the judgment of the Senator from Arkansas on the laws of Arkansas, but I read from the general statutes of Arkansas. This is not applicable to the counties; it applies to the entire State:

> For a resident to hunt deer, bear, or turkey, $1.10; for a nonresident of the State to hunt, $15.

That is the quotation.

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to say to the Senator that if he thinks that law will protect him in my county, he will discover he is in error, if he should go down there.

Mr. SPENCER. I think the Senator is right.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is the general law; but each county may exempt itself from the general provisions of the law. There is no question about the information of the Senator being accurate as far as it goes, and I am not trying to be critical of the Senator or to leave that impression in his mind. Each county may determine that for itself, and some counties may avail themselves of that right. In some counties you could hunt with a license, and in some you could not. I have no criticism to make of the Senator's statement, and I do not want to kill his bill; but if it is to cost $3,000,000 a year to establish the game preserves, that $3,000,000 will have to come out of somebody's pocket, and $2,500,000 of it will come out of the pockets of the people of this country, usually the farmers, who never will see one of the game preserves.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, as I understand it, the object of the proposed license is not to raise money at all. The real object of the license is to control the shooting of migratory birds. It is a method of control that is used a great deal and in many ways. It is absolutely useless to pass a measure of this kind without giving unlimited authority to some one to make rules and regulations. In this instance that power is given to the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General. With the power that is given in the bill over licenses they can, by forfeiting a license, absolutely deny eternally a citizen of the country the right to shoot migratory birds. It is a tremendous power.

The bill does confer power to make rules and regulations. It states that such rules and regulations shall become a part of the license. They can provide that on the violation of any one of the rules, technical or not, insignificant if you please, that from that time on the license is forfeited and never again can that licensee obtain another license. That tremendous power may be necessary to protect the game preserves, the game refuges, and public shooting grounds, but there is no reason for the granting of such tremendous power throughout the entire country and even on private preserves. For that reason I favor the amendment giving unlimited power, as it does in the bill, for making the rules and regulations only with regard to public shooting grounds and game and bird refuges. But I am very much opposed to giving the unlimited power.

If I thought it necessary to raise the money to buy any of the preserves, I would consider very seriously the proposition of a license, but I know it is unnecessary. I know the Government has been establishing game preserves and breeding grounds on its public domain. It has a tremendous lot of that land very eminently proper to be used and entirely fitted for this purpose. It is a matter of fact that it is hardly necessary to purchase much land now for the purpose.

The real point is that the license is wanted so as to have unlimited control over the shooting of migratory birds, and it is the only way it can be had. We have a law to-day which makes it a crime to shoot migratory birds out of season or to shoot them at certain times of the night or after dark. Those provisions are working very successfully, but those who are interested are not satisfied with that power, and are not satisfied with court punishment. What they want is a bureau to have the power to deny a license to the citizens of the country. It may be all right to grant them that power with regard to Government lands and Government preserves, but it is a tremendous power to grant them with regard to all the lands of the country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] to the amendment as amended.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. ERNST (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARRISON. On this vote I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I am unable to obtain a transfer, and therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (after having voted in the affirmative). I have already voted, but I wish to announce that I have a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Making the same announcement as on the previous vote with reference to my pair and transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING];

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—18.

Caraway	Harris	Overman	Shields
Dial	Heflin	Pittman	Smith
Fletcher	Jones, N. Mex.	Pomerene	Swanson
George	Kendrick	Ransdell
Glass	McKellar	Sheppard

NAYS—32.

Cummins	Keyes	Robinson	Williams
Edge	King	Shortridge
Elkins	McCormick	Simmons
Fernald	McCumber	Stanfield

So Mr. CARAWAY's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. NEW. Following the defeat of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas a while ago, was the amendment to which that referred agreed to as amended?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was; and it has just been readopted. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. NEW. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair and transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. ERNST (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "yea." If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay." In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before in reference to the transfer of my pair, I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before in reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when Mr. SIMMONS's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is absent on important business. He is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG].

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHIELDS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING];

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] is necessarily absent, and, if present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—36.

Ball	Frelinghuysen	Moses	Smoot
Brandegee	Gooding	Nelson	Spencer
Brookhart	Harreld	New	Sterling
Calder	Kendrick	Nicholson	Sutherland
Capper	Ladd	Norbeck	Townsend

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 6, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, in whose wisdom and mercy there is neither variableness nor shadow of turning, consider and hear us. Continue to teach us that duty is the upper road that leads to God and he who fails wrongs his own happiness, his intellect, and his fellow men. To-day give us the rapture of high encouragement and of a great, glowing outlook upon our country. Keep before us the example and the inspiration of Him who is all of Thee that we can ever know. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MADDEN, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 13180, Report 1264) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time and, with accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee reserved all points of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions and bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 540. An act for the relief of Bradley Sykes; and

H. R. 449. An act for the relief of the Cornwell Co., Saginaw, Mich.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday, and the Clerk will call the roll of committees.

The Clerk called the roll of committees, and when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was reached—

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 10531) to distribute the commissioned line and engineer officers of the Coast Guard in grades, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 10531, to distribute the commissioned line and engineer officers of the Coast Guard in grades, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar and the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HICKS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the number of permanent commissioned line officers of the Coast Guard now authorized by law shall be distributed in grades, as follows: 1 commandant, 7 captains, 12 commanders, 35 lieutenant commanders, 37 lieutenants, and 77 lieutenants (junior grade) and ensigns; and the number of permanent commissioned engineer officers now authorized by law shall be distributed in grades, as follows: 1 engineer in chief, 3 captains (engineering), 6 commanders (engineering), 12 lieutenant commanders (engineering), 22 lieutenants (engineering), and 42 lieutenants (junior grade) (engineering) and ensigns (engineering). Promotions to the grades created by this act, namely, captain, captain (engineering), and commander (engineering), shall be made from the next lower grade by seniority: Provided, That lieutenants and lieutenants (junior grade), both line and engineering, may be promoted, subject to examination as provided by law, without regard to number or length of service in grade, to such grades in the Coast Guard not above lieutenant commander or lieutenant commander (engineering) as correspond to the permanent ranks and grades that may be attained in accordance with law by line officers of the regular Navy of the same length of total commissioned service, and officers thus promoted shall be extra numbers in their respective grades, which extra numbers shall not at any one time exceed the following, respectively: 20 lieutenant commanders, 15 lieutenants, 15 lieutenant commanders (engineering), and 8 lieutenants (engineering), but no officer shall be promoted under this proviso who would thereby be advanced in rank ahead of an officer in the same grade and corps whose name stands above his on the official precedence list: Provided further, That captains and captains (engineering) shall have the rank of, and be of corresponding grade to, captains in the Navy, and commanders (engineering) shall have the rank of, and be of corresponding grade to, commanders in the Navy.

SEC. 2. That the title of captain commandant in the Coast Guard is hereby changed to commandant. Hereafter the commandant shall be selected from the active list of line officers not below the grade of commander and shall have, while serving as commandant, the rank, pay, and allowances of a rear admiral (lower half) of the Navy: Provided, That any officer who shall hereafter serve as commandant shall, when retired, be retired with the rank of commandant and with the pay of a rear admiral (lower half) of the Navy on the retired list, and that an officer whose term of service as commandant has expired may be appointed a captain and shall be an additional number in that grade; but if not so appointed, he shall take the place on the lineal list in the grade that he would have attained had he not served as commandant and be an additional number in such grade: Provided further, That the engineer in chief, while so serving, shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a captain (engineering) in the Coast Guard, and hereafter the engineer in chief shall be selected from the active list of engineer officers not below the grade of lieutenant commander (engineering): And provided further, That an officer who shall hereafter serve as engineer in chief shall, when retired, be retired with the rank of engineer in chief and with the pay of a captain (engineering) on the retired list, and that an officer whose term of service as engineer in chief has expired may be appointed a commander (engineering) and shall be an additional number in that grade; but if not so appointed, he shall take the place on the lineal list in the grade that he would have attained had he not served as engineer in chief and be an additional number in such grade: And provided further, That a constructor, after 10 years' commissioned service in the Revenue Cutter Service and Coast Guard, shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a lieutenant commander, and after 20 years' commissioned service the rank, pay, and allowances of a commander.

SEC. 3. That hereafter no commissioned officer of the Coast Guard shall be promoted to a higher grade or rank on the active list, except to commandant or to engineer in chief, until his mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform all the duties of such higher grade or rank have been established to the satisfaction of a board of examining officers appointed by the President, and until he has been examined by a board of medical officers and pronounced physically qualified to perform all the duties of such higher grade or rank: Provided, That if any commissioned officer shall fail in his physical examination for promotion and be found incapacitated for service by reason of physical disability contracted in the line of duty, he shall be retired with the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted: Provided further, That hereafter when a commissioned officer of the Coast Guard who has had 40 years' service shall retire, he shall be placed on the retired list with the rank and retired pay of one grade above that actually held by him at the time of retirement; and, in the case of a captain, the rank and retired pay of one grade above shall be the rank of commodore and the pay of a commodore in the Navy on the retired list.

SEC. 4. That an ensign, an ensign (engineering), or a district superintendent with the rank of ensign shall be required to complete three years' service in his grade, after which he shall be eligible for promotion to the next higher grade without regard to the number already in that higher grade.

SEC. 5. That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to reduce the rank, pay, or allowances of any commissioned officer of the Coast Guard as now provided by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules of the House debate on the bill is confined to two hours, one-half to be controlled by those in favor of the bill and one-half by those opposed to the bill, and the debate is to be confined to the merits of the bill.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, as chairman of the committee that reported the bill I am in favor of it and would like to be recognized to control one-half of the time. At this moment I know of no one opposing it, but I suppose it will be necessary for some one to assert himself if he wants to control the time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if no member of the committee is opposed to the bill, I ask for recognition.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It is not time, is it, Mr. Chairman, to recognize anyone in opposition to the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have not asked for recognition unless there is no member of the committee opposed to the bill. There has been no minority report and there is no information that there is any member of the committee opposed to it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, the senior member of the minority side of the committee will probably be here in a moment and claim the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill as it comes before the committee is not so comprehensive in respect to what it covers and what is necessary to consider in regard to it as it might have been had it not been for the passage of what is known as the pay bill. When our committee first gave attention to this subject the salaries of the commissioned officers of the Coast Guard were quite out of tune with those of the officers of other military branches of the Government whose duties were comparable, so far as they could be, to those of officers of the Coast Guard. By the passage of the pay bill, however, the inequalities which were of considerable concern at the outset have been virtually eliminated and are no longer a matter for consideration.

At the time we began the consideration of the bill and had hearings on it, it would have taken an appropriation amounting to $130,000 to have brought up the pay of the Coast Guard officers covered by the bill to the standard of those of the Army and Navy. By virtue of that pay bill, however, the increase in expense which would follow the passage of this bill will be due merely to the advance of several officers and will amount to only about $13,000. There has been, so far as the chairman of the committee knows, no register of any objection to this bill.

The history of the Coast Guard and its predecessors merged into the Coast Guard a few years ago is perhaps better known than the history of the Army and the Navy. The old Revenue Cutter Service and the Coast Guard Service later performed a part in the early days in our history of this country that has never been equaled in respect of gallantry, in respect of accomplishment, in recognition for achievements, by that of any foreign country. It would be a great pleasure for anyone who has the opportunity to study these subjects and write a thesis and deliver it on the Coast Guard. The record is one of the greatest gallantry, of the greatest accomplishment, and is one so replete with doings and achievements and of such a character that anyone who would pursue the subject in detail would be well repaid.

In view of the fact that there is now so little under consideration in appropriation, which seems to be the great care in these days; in view of the fact that the consideration of the bill has been reduced to a point where there is really not much to think about except the rearrangement of the commissioned officers in such a way as to treat them fairly and at the same time to open up the glut which has interfered with the progress of the organization in respect to proper officers to do their work, to open up the opportunity for advance, there is not much to say. It appears that the glut that has become established in this procession of officers in the department has been so great as to discourage young men from entering the service, and the result will soon be that, without this legislation, the Coast Guard will be badly handicapped and become inefficient.

I would be very glad indeed to make a recital of the Coast Guard and its work, to tell you what it has done and what it is doing, and suggest what its future probably would be. I would like to go into a lot of detail; but, in view of the assumption, at all events, that the subject is pretty well known and that our task here is so limited in its scope, I shall not undertake to make a statement at this time. I shall say a few words more and then reserve my time, in case of need for explanation or otherwise, and for the benefit of those who, other than myself, wish to speak on the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. That part of section 3 found on the top of page 5 of the bill provides that when a commissioned officer in the Coast Guard is retired, he shall be retired with a grade higher than that held by him at the time of his retirement. What precedent has the gentleman to offer for that provision?

Mr. WINSLOW. The statement in answer to that is as follows, and I shall read it from the report:

> The act of April 16, 1908 (35 Stats. 61) provides "That any officer who shall hereafter serve as captain commandant shall, when retired, be retired with the rank of captain commandant and with the pay of a colonel in the Army on the retired list." (The pay of a colonel in the Army is the same as that of a captain in the Navy.)
> Thus the act of April 16, 1908, allows the officer who has served as commandant, when retired, to be retired with the rank he held as commandant and with the retired pay of that rank. Section 2 of the bill seeks to do precisely the same thing, taking cognizance of the fact that the bill gives the commandant in the future while so serving the rank of a rear admiral of the Navy of the lower half.

In other words, it has been brought into record with the practice in the Navy.

Mr. BLANTON. I am speaking of that part of section 8 found on the top of page 5 of the bill which provides that when any commissioned officer of the Coast Guard is retired he shall be retired at one grade higher than that held at the time of his retirement.

Mr. WINSLOW. That is the Navy provision, and this is made to conform to that.

Mr. BLANTON. As a matter of fact, this bill is merely one of promotion and raise of pay, is it not?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes and no. It is one of promotion to equalize the positions held by the Coast Guard officers as far as possible up to the rank of captain with those of the Navy and the Army. The question of pay, as I stated, does not cut much figure any more, because the pay bill has virtually cared for all of them, except that the passage of this bill will raise enough officers within this service to make a difference of $13,000. Beyond that there is no increase whatever.

Mr. BLANTON. Just one other question. The bill limits the number of officers above the grade of ensign?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. But with regard to ensigns, there is no restriction or limitation in the bill. Why should not the number of ensigns be restricted as well as the number of commissioned officers?

Mr. WINSLOW. I shall go round a little bit, but will answer the gentleman fully. This makes no change in the number of officers, including ensigns.

Mr. BLANTON. But it makes no limitation as to the number of ensigns.

Mr. WINSLOW. It does; yes. It provides for 77 lieutenants of the junior grade and ensigns as line officers, and in the engineering department as junior officers it provides for 42 lieutenants of the junior grade and ensigns. They are out of balance, and the reason they were grouped together is that we might use such as we have for the two lines of duty until such time comes when they can automatically, through the application of this legislation, make it possible to have a definite number of lieutenants and ensigns likewise. That is provided for in the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I think th's is a splendid attempt to take care of these men, and I hope it will be successful. There are 189 officers, as I recall.

Mr. STAFFORD. One hundred and sixty-nine.

Mr. BUTLER. In any event the promotion has been very slow, has it not?

Mr. WINSLOW. It has been worse than dead.

Mr. BUTLER. And the pay has been very small, until the pay bill was passed. Gentlemen have heard what the gentleman from Massachusetts has said about the merits of the Coast Guard. It is semimilitary in its character, is it not?

Mr. WINSLOW. It is. It is subject to call in time of war, and in this last war the navigators of the principal transports, among other ships in the Navy, were frequently from the Coast Guard. They were increased in rank. I would like to illustrate for a moment, if the gentleman will permit?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. WINSLOW. This is one case which is illustrative of many. A man second in command on a transport had about 50 young naval officers under him. He was a lieutenant in the Coast Guard. During the war he was advanced in the Navy to the position of commander or lieutenant commander and was made second officer on the transport. He has now been reduced to a point where every one of these 50 young officers who were under him on the transport expect him to salute them on the street, and not one of the 50 was considered capable of running the transport. There are several cases where the fathers who are officers in the Coast Guard, and have been for thirty-odd years, have sons in the Navy, recently out of the academy, who are up to the grade and in some cases ahead in rank of that of their daddies. The inequalities have been so great that they are entirely out of keeping and dignity.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman state what the abilities of these men amount to? Will the gentleman state their experience and how they have served along with the Navy, and speak of their great ability as navigators? These men on the sea who have piloted these little ships around from place to place have become the equal of a number of great navigators of the United States Navy.

Mr. WINSLOW. Without any desire to cast aspersion upon any other branch of the service—and there is no need for doing any such thing—I think we can safely stand by this little Coast Guard Service with the assurance that they have no superiors on the pay roll of the United States in any department, engineering or otherwise.

Mr. BUTLER. And heretofore they have had one high grade, that of commodore, only.

Mr. WINSLOW. Commandant.

Mr. BUTLER. Captain commandant.

Mr. WINSLOW. That will be changed under this bill to commandant, taking out the "captain."

Mr. BUTLER. He will get the pay and allowance of a commodore of the Navy, which is that of a rear admiral of the lower grades; is that right?

Mr. WINSLOW. In case of retirement; yes.

Mr. BUTLER. You have not increased the seven captains here.

Mr. WINSLOW. There are no captains in the Coast Guard——

Mr. BUTLER. I thought you had seven.

Mr. WINSLOW. There is a captain commandant. There are no captains now. We provide in this bill——

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not the gentleman mistaken in that particular? Does not the act—Thirty-fifth Statutes at Large, page 61—provide for six senior captains with the grade and pay of a lieutenant colonel of the Army?

Mr. WINSLOW. My recollection is to the contrary. If I am wrong, I am sorry.

Mr. BUTLER. They have seven captains.

Mr. STAFFORD. Six under the act.

Mr. WINSLOW. Six commanders.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, I count seven. I am sorry to interrupt the gentleman, because he is explaining very fully the bill, but I have devoted some attention to it and was interested.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman allow me to read the statute. There may be a subsequent amendment to this statute, but I call the gentleman's attention, as I stated a moment ago, to United States Statutes at Large, Thirty-fifth, page 61:

> Six senior captains, who shall perform duty in connection with the construction of vessels and the inspection of their armament and crews and such other duties as the Secretary of the Treasury or the President may prescribe.

Mr. WINSLOW. Of course I am not up to the last minute in every detail on this subject. The record I have received from the Coast Guard and testimony presented to the committee shows that they have no captains at the present time except the captain commandant.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. If the gentleman will yield, the statute the gentleman just stated has reference to the old Revenue Cutter Service where the commodore had a rank comparable to that of captain in the Army. That, of course, referred to a captain with the comparable rank in the Navy, which is equivalent to that of a colonel in the Army.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is in error, comparable with the rank of a lieutenant colonel in the Army.

Mr. WINSLOW. I think there are no captains in the Coast Guard now.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania just remarked, if I understood him, that the commandant you are creating now will have a comparable rank with that of rear admiral in the Navy.

Mr. WINSLOW. Now, may I clear you?

Mr. LITTLE. That is what I am asking you about.

Mr. WINSLOW. He goes back to commodore——

Mr. LITTLE. But there is no such officer as commodore, is there?

Mr. WINSLOW. Oh, yes.

Mr. LITTLE. In the Navy?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. A few left.

Mr. WINSLOW. The title is there just the same.

Mr. LITTLE. That is in dispute.

Mr. BUTLER. And after the passage of the personnel act of 1897 the grade was abolished, but a few officers still have the rank of commodore. There are two grades of rear admiral in the Navy, the upper and the lower. The lower grade is supposed to correspond with that of commodore.

Mr. LITTLE. Can any more commodores be appointed?

Mr. BUTLER. No; there is the grade of upper and lower.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman from Massachusetts says yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Not in the Navy.

Mr. LITTLE. And the commandant will have the rank of a rear admiral?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. And the commodore business does not enter into it——

Mr. WINSLOW. Only on retirement.

Mr. LITTLE. I think I understand it now. You are retiring the captain——

Mr. WINSLOW. The captain will retire as a commodore.

Mr. LITTLE. I am lost again. Is there a captain going to retire as a commodore under this bill?

Mr. WINSLOW. Well, it would seem so, and if the captain retires he retires as a commodore.

Mr. LITTLE. Is that the provision of the bill?

Mr. WINSLOW. That is the only way to provide for a captain to be retired as of the next upper grade.

Mr. LITTLE. You do not retire him as a rear admiral of the lower grade?

Mr. WINSLOW. You will not have a rear admiral except the commandant.

Mr. OLIVER. I recognize that this bill has merit, but some of its provisions are too liberal in view of the recent pay bill. I think the provision of the bill to which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] has just referred will be the only provision about which there will be any serious objection, and that is in fixing the rank of the retiring superior officers, thereby increasing largely their retired pay, not only under the bill that we passed recently, but also by reason of giving them under this bill advanced rank.

Now I would like to ask the gentleman if he has looked into the question of what effect this bill, if it passes, will have on the provision of the pay bill which excepts from the limitation of $7,200 the pay of the captain in the Coast Guard Service, and entitling him to the maximum pay for that grade, which is about $7,800, including allowances. Would that limitation be removed as to all of the captains that this bill seeks to authorize for the service?

Mr. WINSLOW. If I get your question correctly, my answer would be, whatever pertains to the Navy would pertain to the even rank in the Coast Guard.

Mr. OLIVER. In the Navy a captain is limited to $7,200. Without the limitation of $7,200 his pay, after 30 years' service, would be in the neighborhood of $7,800. The same provision applies to the rank of colonel in the Army, which corresponds, of course, to that of captain in the Navy. However, in the Coast Guard Service, there being but one captain authorized, the committee in preparing the pay bill excepted the captain of this service from any limitation as to pay, and he was allowed to draw the maximum. I was just wondering whether you had any provision in the bill that would protect the Treasury and place any additional captains, authorized in this bill, on the same basis as the Navy and Army as respects the pay limitation.

You see this bill takes out the sole captain to whom the pay bill gave increased pay and makes him now commandant, with the pay and rank of rear admiral in the Navy. Have you considered this?

Mr. WINSLOW. I regret I do not catch the point. If the gentleman will give me the correct question I would like to answer it.

Mr. OLIVER. The pay bill provided a schedule of pay and allowances which, with length of service, gives to a captain of the Navy or colonel of the Army $7,800 maximum pay, but there was a proviso inserted, as follows:

> Provided, however, That the base pay, together with all allowances, shall not exceed for these grades $7,200.

Now, that did not apply to the captain's grade in the Coast Guard Service, for the reason that there was at that time but one officer in that grade, and but one officer could hold that grade; so limitation of $7,200 as to the captain of the Coast Guard was omitted, and he was entitled to the full pay of $7,800 if length of service authorized it.

Mr. WINSLOW. I think I can answer that now.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. WINSLOW. We inquired very carefully about that, and the conclusion, as I understand, of the commandant and the officers and associates of the Coast Guard was that the limitation as to pay of the seven captains created by the bill would be $7,200. I have not worked it out on the maximum, but I have it worked out on the base pay, and on the base pay it is figured that the captain commandant while serving as suggested would get the same pay as the captain in the Navy.

Mr. OLIVER. I assume that you are trying here, as you stated a few moments ago, to give increased rank to the one captain who is called the commandant of this service?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes; while commandant.

Mr. OLIVER. And that, of course, will increase his pay a small amount?

Mr. WINSLOW. About $300.
Mr. BUTLER. One hundred and eighty-six dollars.
Mr. WINSLOW. It is about $300 for the commandant.
Mr. OLIVER. Now, there is but one captain in this service under existing law, and there can be but one. This bill seeks to make six, as I understand?
Mr. WINSLOW. Seven.
Mr. OLIVER. Does the $7,200 limitation of the pay bill apply to this increased number?
Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. OLIVER. Yes.
Mr. BUTLER. Does not the gentleman think the bill itself would apply the limitation?
Mr. OLIVER. I did not have the pay bill at hand. When I get it I can answer it myself.
Mr. WINSLOW. I will say to all these gentlemen that that matter was discussed many times, and as late as yesterday afternoon we had such a discussion, with the cooperation of officers who are to get the money, and perhaps they are looking at it as keenly as anybody. Under the law grades would be the same.
Mr. OLIVER. That may be clear.
Mr. KLINE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.
Mr. KLINE of Pennsylvania. What about the proportion of officers for the Coast Survey? Is it equal or near that of the many officers?
Mr. WINSLOW. Well, that is a rather remote comparison, I am obliged to say to you, although I do not want to be unhappy about it.
Mr. KLINE of Pennsylvania. I mean the Coast Guard.
Mr. WINSLOW. It is the Coast Guard that we are talking about.
Mr. KLINE of Pennsylvania. Are the officers required to have the same preparation, or equal preparation, with that of the naval officers?
Mr. WINSLOW. Well, they have equal preparation; and when it comes to seafaring, it is a good deal more. They have their academy, and their standard is quite as high as that of the Naval Academy at Annapolis.
Mr. BUTLER. The examinations are very rigid.
Mr. WINSLOW. Their cadets can enter at a later age, and so there is the added benefit of greater maturity.
Mr. KLINE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman's statement answers my inquiry.
Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. With reference to the inquiry and the colloquy following it between the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Wisconsin, chapter 145 of volume 25 of the Statutes at Large contains this provision in respect to senior captains:

Six senior captains, who shall perform duty in connection with the construction of vessels and the inspection of their armament and crews, and such other duties as the Secretary of the Treasury or the President may prescribe, with the rank of a lieutenant colonel in the Army and a commander in the Navy.

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.
Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That is just what the gentleman said, that under the present apportionment there are six commanders and no captains. The term "senior captains" is one that went out of use with the establishment of the Coast Guard Service.
Mr. WINSLOW. These Coast Guard officers are considered and taken as about two or three ranks below those of officers in the Army and Navy whose responsibilities are comparable, with a view also to length of service.
Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WINSLOW. Certainly.
Mr. STAFFORD. The report was written before the Army Coast Guard pay bill was passed, and so it does not disclose how the increases that the gentleman estimates at $13,000 will result.
Mr. WINSLOW. The gentleman is correct.
Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman that information? I would be interested, and I think the House would be interested, in knowing just how the additional increase will result. I have had difficulty in coming to the same conclusion that the gentleman has reached, in view of the fact that the bill provides for 20 additional lieutenant commanders, 15 lieutenant commanders (engineering), and 8 lieutenants (engineering) more than those now authorized by law. I had made some estimates that would carry the amount much above $13,000.
Mr. WINSLOW. I can tell the gentleman in a general way. The increase in commanders and lieutenant commanders is for the purpose of relieving a glut that there is in the personnel of the officers of the Coast Guard. This bill does not increase by a man the number of commissioned officers, but it does rearrange them. There would be an increase in the number of commanders, because three lieutenants (engineering) would be made commanders with an increase of $965 each. Eight lieutenants (engineering) would be promoted to lieutenant commanders with an increase of $947.75 each. A constructor from the rank of lieutenant commander to the rank of commander would add $1,115, and I think you will find that totals about $13,000.
Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit me—I do not wish to take all of his time—does not the fact that these men are given the higher grades entitle them to the higher ratings for allowances carried in the Army, Navy, and Coast Guard pay bills?
Mr. WINSLOW. I understand that when they are commissioned in the higher rank the pay is established by law for them, and they get whatever allowances go with their rank and service.
Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield there?
Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.
Mr. BLACK. Has the gentleman made any estimate of what the allowances will add to the $13,000 increase that he has mentioned?
Mr. WINSLOW. The committee has been advised that under the provisions of the pay bill which is now a law it will take $13,000 more to run the Coast Guard because of the increased remuneration of all kinds to commissioned officers.
Mr. BLACK. Including the increased allowances?
Mr. WINSLOW. That is what I understand.
Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts permit me to answer the gentleman from Texas?
Mr. WINSLOW. Certainly.
Mr. BUTLER. I have had an expert in whom I have confidence go carefully over the probable increase in the expense to the Government, and he has reported to me, and I have his report here in writing, that the increased expense will be about $13,000.
Mr. WINSLOW. The gentleman gets that certainly from a different angle than mine.
Mr. BUTLER. Yes; I get it from the Committee on Naval Affairs. I do not know whether it is accurate. I am simply giving you the best I could get.
Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?
Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.
Mr. DENISON. I am afraid that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] may not have understood entirely the facts which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] was attempting to state. The pay bill that has already become a law took into consideration this condition of the Coast Guard, and that bill increased the pay of these men, but it could not provide for changing their rank, because the committee reporting that bill had no jurisdiction over that. Therefore the pay of these men has already been provided for. This bill simply makes a rearrangement in their rank and gives them appropriate rank. This bill will add to the total expense of this service only about $13,000.
Mr. WINSLOW. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I explained that carefully earlier in my remarks, and I think my answer was correct, namely, that we shall increase the expense to the Government of these commissioned officers by $13,000 in consequence of the rearrangement of the number of officers now under commission without increasing the number of the officers. It is the rearrangement from lieutenant to lieutenant commander or lieutenant commander to commander.
Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WINSLOW. I will.
Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. My understanding of the pay bill passed was that the allowance for quarters was not as to rank but period of service, so that under this bill the increased allowance of quarters would practically be nothing.
Mr. WINSLOW. I think that is correct.
Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.
Mr. BLANTON. But with regard to the cost, it was a fact that at the time the gentleman's committee first began consideration of the bill, their estimate then of the cost was approximately $130,000.
Mr. WINSLOW. That is correct.
Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman explain how experts have been able to reduce it from $130,000 to $13,000?
Mr. WINSLOW. Possibly I can, with the statement that it may not be complete. That is a matter that did not come under our committee but came under the jurisdiction of another committee which made up the pay bill, so called. As I understand it—and I am subject to correction—they began to compare officer by officer of different services, and after establishing a comparable grade they decided on their remuneration. They found there was a great disparity existing between the rank of officers in the Coast Guard and their pay as contrasted with the commission, rank, and the pay of officers in other services. So when they came to work it out on a level of service and length of time and other elements that I can not state now, they brought the pay of the Coast Guard up to a point where they automatically took charge of the $130,000 without any consideration of change in the rank at all on a service and longevity basis.

Now, if the bill goes through and the officers appointed as the bill provides, it will be aiming in a few years to balance the officers from captain to ensign, and in the meantime there will be more or less of a glut and they will have to have a few more of this rank than they did have, or a few more of that, and in the transfer from one rank to another in an effort to come as near a balance as they can they find that the transfer will cost $13,000 more. I think my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], who has been through this matter with reference to the pay bill, can give the details.

Mr. BUTLER. No; but the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] can. But I want to ask the gentleman one question. Is the Coast Guard satisfied with this measure? If it is, it is the only one in the military service that I have ever known about. It does not give them a very great opportunity to promote. It is quite modest.

Mr. WINSLOW. The gentleman's question provides an opportunity to make a statement which I had not intended to make for lack of time, but I do not want to run away from it. The officers of the Coast Guard in my estimation—and I speak for myself alone—have been a complacent, long-suffering line of chumps. [Laughter.] When some other people who have rank in some service or another—and I call no names—have been devoting their time to getting higher rank and more pay, these fellows have been going to sea bringing in all kinds of ships, no matter to what service they belonged, when other services have given them up and commercial wreckers have failed to go. When these other people have gone to sleep in the middle of the night these officers of the Coast Guard have heard the S. O. S. and have gone to the rescue. They have been so busy doing a patriotic duty, doing a sailor's duty, almost an angel's duty, that they have not been bothering about their pay. [Laughter and applause.] But in the last few years affairs in this country have made it necessary even for angels to flap their wings and look for more grease. [Laughter.] These men have found that they must either quit the service which they have stood up for and to which they are as loyal as those in the United States marine service—and the marines are a great lot of boys having a lot of besom pushed into them—but they have nothing on the Coast Guard.

They have had their pay going up all the time, but the Coast Guard have not, and they are being paid worse than the hired men and have been for years. Why in the world somebody has not taken hold of this matter before and pushed it along, I do not know. For six years I think the attention of those on our committee has been automatically turned toward the Coast Guard, but there came a time when this bill came on when we had the opportunity to investigate and see if we could not do something worthy of the cause.

The gentleman asked me if the Coast Guard officers are satisfied with the bill and the pay. I never asked any one of them, but I will say this much. Every man with whom I have talked has had a "Thank you" and a "God bless you" in his tone, and seemed to feel that under all conditions of the present time this help was everything that could be expected. So I say to that extent they are satisfied. If I were one, I would not be.

Mr. BUTLER. That is right; I think the provisions of the bill are modest, and I am surprised that they are satisfied. I am told that they are, and I know a number of them. Now that the gentleman from Massachusetts has thrown around a few bricks, does he recollect the year of 1918, when we did increase the pay?

Mr. WINSLOW. I do.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to say that this service has not been overlooked. We took them into the Navy and provided additional pay.

Mr. WINSLOW. But you took it all away when the war was over.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Do I understand that the bill comes before the House with the unanimous approval of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. WINSLOW. I can not say without looking up the minutes of the meeting whether it is a unanimous report or not. I do not at the moment remember anybody who voted in the negative.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. It seems to have the approval of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WINSLOW. It seems to have everyone's approval.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. And it is fairly satisfactory to the Coast Guard themselves.

Mr. WINSLOW. I did say that. I reserve the remainder of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] opposed to this bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I am in favor of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] opposed to this bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] opposed to this bill?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama for one hour.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, it is a dangerous thing to pass this bill unless the committee is given an opportunity to give it further consideration. Since we reported this bill the general officers' pay bill has been reported and passed by the House and Senate, and has finally become a law. Our committee that reported this bill did not consider it with a view to the general pay bill. The committee, as a committee, knows nothing as to the effect that the passage of the general pay bill will have upon this bill. It may be that certain individuals of the committee have investigated the subject and have some opinion upon it, but I can say that the committee as a whole, the general pay bill having been passed, does not know anything whatsoever about what the result of passing this bill will be.

The question then presented is, Do you think it is desirable that legislation be passed in that fashion? Gentlemen should bear in mind that this is one of the most technical of all subjects. With all respect to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW], who is chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which reported this bill, let me say this, that there is not a Member of Congress who has any knowledge of the subject of the pay of officers of the Army, Navy, and Coast Guard that is worth listening to.

The subject of officers' pay is so technical in its nature as to require the services of a specialist to deal with it, and these gentlemen to whom I have referred in reaching any conclusion about it necessarily rely upon the opinions and statements of high officers in the separate services. To know anything about a naval officer's pay you have got to be at least a commander, and to know anything about an Army officer's pay you have to be at least a colonel. To know anything about the pay of a Coast Guard officer you have to have rank up to the highest. To illustrate, I may say that scarcely an officer in the Army, the Navy, or the Coast Guard knows what any other officer is receiving as pay altogether. With his allowances and his longevity pay and this and that quirk, nobody knows what anybody else is receiving except the Paymaster General who had gone to work and figured out what each particular officer is getting. The subject is one of the most technical that can possibly be considered by Congress, and yet we propose to deal with it without a committee having considered it. So far as the work of our committee is concerned, no member of it can tell just what any officer of the Coast Guard is going to draw after this bill is passed.

Mr. STEVENSON. That being the case, if these gentlemen who have made a study of these questions for 20 years, because some of them have been here that length of time, do not know anything about it and can not find out anything about it, then what is the gentleman's committee expected to do if we do send the bill back to them?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. What we would do will be to call Captain Commandant Reynolds before us and ask him what the effect of the bill will be; he will tell us and we will accept what he says. That is what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] does when he considers the pay of a naval officer. He calls some specialist before him and relies upon his statement.

Mr. BUTLER. I could not do otherwise; and in my defense let me ask the gentleman——

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Oh, the gentleman needs no defense so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it not always a good thing for us to select some one in whom we have confidence and, until he fools us, accept his judgment?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It is absolutely necessary to do so in dealing with a technical subject of this kind. The complaint that I am making about this bill is that it has not been done.

There is one more observation which I desire to make. No military officer ever had as high rank as he thought he should have. No officer or civilian ever had pay as great as he thought he was entitled to. When I say that I do but announce my recognition of human qualities. An officer of the Army, Navy, or Coast Guard daily comes in contact with some officer of higher rank to whose opinions and position he is compelled to pay a deference that has no connection with the relative merits or capacities of the two men. Therefore he is rankled that some man has a higher rank than he and that he must obey some man's order without regard to whether it is right or wrong.

Men never receive large enough salaries, according to their own judgment, because every man who draws a salary arranges his scale of living accordingly, and always arranges it right up to the limit of his salary. Therefore he feels a pressure to raise his scale of living to compete with that of somebody else with whom he is brought in contact. He always needs more money. These are human traits that can not be gotten away from.

Congress is usually quite sympathetic with aspirations for higher rank and more pay, and we have the courage of our convictions along those lines, except when it comes to ourselves. We are willing and have been willing to increase the salaries of every kind of public officer to meet the increase in the cost of living which has come about in the last few years unless that officer happens to be a Congressman. But we have not courage enough to increase our own salaries, although we realize that the old salary of $5,000 a year in the day in which it was paid had a much greater purchasing power than the $7,500 which we receive has to-day when almost every Congressman with a family has a struggle to live on his compensation.

Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with a set of officers who are entirely worthy. Let me say at the outset that the officers of the Coast Guard are just as worthy in every way as any officers in the Army or Navy, and are entitled to as high a place in matter of rank and merit and to just as much pay. It is not with any thought to the contrary that I am speaking on this bill.

But there is this that I would ask you to ponder: The average officer with whom we are dealing in this bill is a higher paid man in the essential aspect than a Member of Congress. I would rather have the lifetime permanent position of one of these officers—with its retirement privileges, its longevity pay, and other financial advantages—than have the salary of a Member of Congress, with its accompanying burdensome obligation to contribute to charities, churches, lodges, and organizations of every kind whatsoever—referring now to purely legitimate calls, and not to the demands of political bums and grafters. Why, we can not even offer to run for Congress without some measly little political committee in our district or State demand of us that we should pay them a price for even the poor privilege of getting our names on the ticket. Congressmen have to run for their jobs every two years, and many of us incur heavy campaign expenses, while our Army, Navy, and Coast Guard officers are sure of their positions. We have heavy expenses for travel and living away from home; and so I say, so far as the purely financial aspect is concerned, there is not the slightest doubt in the world but that the average officer gets more net money for his services than any Member of Congress gets out of his salary.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I preface it by saying that I would rather be here than in the Coast Guard.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will say this to the gentleman also, that the rate of mortality in the Coast Guard is less than it is in the House.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Political or physical?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Both. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARKE] has not been here long, and there will be enough of political mortality to advise him on that subject very soon. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I would like to ask the gentleman a serious question, if he will allow me.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. With pleasure.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman stated awhile ago, if I understood him correctly, that no one can tell—not even members of the committee—how this bill, if it should be enacted into law, may be affected by the provisions of the pay bill. Now, as I understand, this bill was considered before the enactment of the pay bill?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes. Before the pay bill was reported out of committee.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And such hearings as were held antedated the pay bill?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Oh, yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman was making the point——

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I make the point that we are legislating here without knowing what is going to be the effect of our legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. In support of the gentleman's contention he will notice that the recommendation from Mr. Mellon, found in the report, was sent, as the date shows, before the pay bill was passed and did not take into consideration the bill at the time it was made.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Of course; that is obvious.

Now, gentlemen, let us see what this bill is about. Comment was made upon the fact that the officers of the Coast Guard were complacent and long-suffering. That brought on a suggestion from the gentleman from Pennsylvania that they had no reason to be otherwise until they went back to their old pay as of last July.

Now, let me say this: It was in anticipation of going back to the old pay that the agitation arose which has brought this bill forth as its fruit. These men did not want to go back to the old rank and old pay. They had tasted of the advantages of more money and more dignity, and when they found themselves confronted by a return to their original pay and status they were reluctant, and they appealed to our committee. Anybody knows that when you appeal to the great heart of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] you are going to get some response, so naturally we have this bill before us.

What is the real situation that is aimed at here? It is this: Promotions in the Army, the Navy, and the Coast Guard are in due course and come when vacancies are created. Those vacancies are created only by death or retirement. The normal rates of death and retirement are substantially the same in the Army, Navy, and Coast Guard. Therefore, the normal rate of promotion in the Coast Guard is substantially the same as in the Army or Navy. But that statement applies to normal conditions. We have had abnormal conditions during the last 20 years and we have had a tremendous expansion of the Army and the Navy. The ironclad rule in those services is that the first and best fruits of promotion go always to the fellow who is in. If a vacancy exists caused by an expansion of the service those officers who are already in service get the benefit in the shape of promotion, and those officers who are added to the service come in at the foot of the list.

Now, what has resulted? Due to the tremendous increase in our Army and Navy, and the tremendous number of officers added, we have had promotions with unusual and great celerity. We have had boys just out of the academy run, without experience, right up to the rank of major and corresponding rank in the Navy. Up until recently we had practically no second lieutenants in the Army. They went from the academy right up to first lieutenants and captains.

The emergency condition, the extraordinary condition, which existed, with the resulting tremendous expansion in our Army and Navy, increased the number of officers, increased the promotions in those services, and resulted in men going forward to higher rank and higher pay than by qualifications or experience they ought to receive. We might as well be frank about it. That did not happen in the Coast Guard because it was not expanded. The officers of the Coast Guard have gone forward at their old normal rate and in their old regular line of promotion to vacancies created by retirement and death. Officers of the Army and Navy, of much less experience and of inferior qualifications, have, because of being drawn by the mere vacuum of an increase in numbers, been pulled into higher places than these officers in the Coast Guard after the years of service that they have had. Naturally they are dissatisfied with the situation. They are seeking to have Congress remedy it. They want us to give them the promotion they would have received had their service had the expansion corresponding to the Army and Navy.

That is what this bill is about. Nobody can dispute it. These men have become dissatisfied with the relatively inferior rank they hold because the great expansion in the Army and Navy has brought promotion to the Army and Navy officers with extraordinary celerity. They want themselves to be put now on an equality with the officers of the Army and Navy in that respect.

Well, what is going to be the future of the Army and Navy? Some gentlemen have one view about it and some have another. Possibly nobody would agree with me in what I would do. If we are not to increase our Navy any further promotions will slow down; indeed, promotions have now slowed down, and an officer in the Navy will stand no better chance to get a promotion than he would if he had entered the Coast Guard. If we do not further increase our Navy after any existing shortage of officers has been filled, if there be any, the rate of promotion in the Navy will be exactly what it is in the Coast Guard, because it will be only to fill vacancies caused by death and retirement.

We are proposing then to give these officers in the Coast Guard promotion by special enactment. That is what it amounts to; promotion of these men who happen now to be in. What about the men who come after them? There will be no opportunity for them to be promoted by special enactment. We are trying to put these men in the same position as that which they would have occupied if we had expanded the Coast Guard commensurately with the expansion in the Army and Navy. Officers may hereafter be appointed in the Coast Guard and remain just as long in the lower ranks as those who will benefit by this bill would have remained.

The statement is made that these intended beneficiaries will quit the service if this legislation is not passed. Let me say this to you in all frankness: I have just as high regard for the officers of the Coast Guard as I have for the officers of the Army and Navy. My belief is that there are few officers of any of these services who are not doing better in the Army and Navy and Coast Guard than they could do outside in civil life. Let them get out, if they desire, and they will find out that fighting for one's self in civil life is not all that they may imagine it to be. I believe there is not 1 per cent of these officers who could step out of the positions where they now are and get a more desirable place in civil life than the places they now hold. They are not going to quit either. They may make their halloo, but they will not quit, and there will be many others to come after them.

Some Members say they can not get boys to go to the Military and Naval Academies. I can get them; fine young fellows from my district. I wish I had the privilege of sending 100 of my boys to the academies. I would have no trouble in finding them. Most young men are following the line of least resistance when they go to the academies; that is true.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I will take a few minutes more.

The whole purpose of this bill is to give certain officers better rank and better pay. That is all there is about it. Had there been no expansion in our Army and Navy the bill would never have been in here, because then they could not have claimed that there was any basis for it.

We need economy. We need to quit increasing salaries. We need to return to some of our previous ideals on this subject. Do not let anybody be afraid that he will not get enough Army and Navy and Coast Guard officers without an increase of salary.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. In a moment. I believe in paying every man good wages; I believe in giving him good pay. The statement has been made that this is a hazardous occupation. The rate of fatality and disablement and retirement and casualties of one sort and another that have occurred in the service does not prove it.

It is a long-lived service. These men render honorable service, and I wish to see them get good pay; but we do not have to give men unreasonable compensation just because they wear the uniform of the Army or Navy or Coast Guard. We have men in civil life performing just as onerous duties as these men, and most of them are getting less for it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. It is always desirable in any service to have a number of very worthy applicants. We will agree on that?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to say to the gentleman that the prospect of passing this measure has increased the number of applications for this service sixteen times over, because they see some chance in the wide world for promotion by which they can advance from the grade they are in and get a little more pay with their service, a little more compensation than they have received before.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But it is the fellows already in the service who will get the benefit of this legislation.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. An examination will show that very few of these men now in the service will ever reach the higher grades; very few.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I can, out of my own district, from the most worthy and high-class young men, fill the entire Coast Guard academy list within six months.

Mr. BUTLER. But there is not any academy.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Oh, yes; they have an academy. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, they have a place for some instruction, but nothing like the Naval or Military Academy.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It is a similar institution, and they appoint cadets to it. The fact is that they do not give the Congressmen a chance to appoint them. They have their own method of filling the cadetships. They do not give a Congressman a chance to name his constituents.

Mr. BUTLER. So far as I am concerned, I would be willing that they should appoint all of them. I do not want them.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. There are a great many boys in my district who are entirely worthy, and who are seeking an education and an opportunity in life, and I would like to have the privilege of sending them to this academy. I tell you that they would make good Coast Guard officers.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I was interested in the statement of the gentleman from Alabama that no one ever gets out of this service.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I did not say that.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. It appears from the testimony of Lieutenant Commander Billard that in 1921 there were nine resignations from this service.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I did not say that nobody ever got out of it, but that the number of resignations is comparatively small. I want to say that there are very few of those who are in the service who could better themselves by leaving it to enter other occupations. There have been great opportunities in the shipping industry in recent times, but in normal times I doubt very much whether they can better their condition by leaving the service, particularly in view of their assured position, a lifelong occupation, and the retirement privileges in old age when they do not have to do anything for the Government and yet draw down a very handsome salary during the remainder of their lives.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. In view of the statement which the gentleman has made concerning the selection of these cadets, I wish to say that these examinations for cadets are advertised all over the United States. Announcements are sent to every Member of the House and Senate, asking Members to send cadets to take the examinations, and in the examination on April 20, held in different parts of the United States, they got only six cadets.

At the examination in July, 1920, they got only five cadets, and at the examination in December, 1920, they got none at all. In June, 1921, they got one cadet and two cadet engineers, and in December, 1921, they got only five cadets and four cadet engineers. After these men had passed the examination and gone to the academy, one cadet and one cadet engineer resigned because of the poor prospects which they saw ahead of them. In spite of their efforts to fill these vacancies, there are now 45 vacancies in the grade of ensign and 28 in the grade of ensign engineer, or vacancies amounting to 27 per cent in one corps and 32 per cent in the other.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Let me tell the gentleman something that evidently he does not know, that these appointments to cadetships are not based on any particular standard of education. They are based upon competitive examinations, so that a man has to be beyond the need of a reasonable education before he is able to get into the Coast Guard academy by competitive examination. It is the man who gets the highest percentage on an examination. It is not a place where a boy can go and get an education. He must be educated already or he has no chance to get there. The applicants for cadetships must come to Washington for the examinations and must pay their own way, and for the boy with only a high-school training there is no chance that he may get in.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Let me finish, and then the gentleman can get his quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and three Members present—a quorum. The gentleman from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. One thing more in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON]. These are assembled examinations. In order for a boy to take one of these examinations it requires traveling expense and a great deal of other expense. The boys in the country who might enter this service are not acquainted with it. It is not explained to them as to the chance they have to get in. Therefore, even when they happen to hear about the examination they do not choose to go to some remote point to take an examination for something that they feel they have not the remotest chance of getting into. If these appointments were based upon attaining a certain reasonable standard, such as boys must attain in order to enter a first-class college, we would not have any trouble at all in filling the academy. I will agree to fill the academy from my own district, as I said; but it is because it is not done in that way, because it is done in this chimney-corner fashion. That is the reason they do not have the applications. Do not be afraid that we will not get plenty of talent.

Now I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 30 minutes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, speaking of conditions in my own district and other sections of the country which I have had the opportunity to visit during the last few months, I have become very well convinced that one of the most fortunate individuals in the country is the man who holds some kind of a Government office with a fixed salary attached, especially if he hold an office in the Army or the Navy or the Coast Guard, where he not only gets the salary attached to his position, but gets an allowance for quarters, light and fuel, and other incidentals of that sort. It seems to me that the able gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] has made an argument that conclusively establishes that this bill ought not to pass at this time. The chairman of the committee [Mr. WINSLOW] in his opening speech made a statement that Congress had been neglectful of the personnel and commissioned officers of the Coast Guard and had treated them unfairly in refusing for years to give them an increase in pay, but the gentleman corrected his error before the conclusion of his remarks by admitting that in the general pay bill which Congress passed a few months ago the officers and personnel of the Coast Guard were included in the increases just the same as those belonging to the Army and the Navy. I did not vote for the general pay increase bill because I thought it contained some bad provisions, but even though I did not, if these members of the Coast Guard had not been included I would now be willing to include them because they should not be discriminated against. But they were included and they are now receiving the benefits carried by the pay increase bill. These benefits are very liberal and generous and add a heavy enough burden on the shoulders of the taxpayer without adding on any more.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] very properly emphasized that the effect of this bill is simply to create new offices, so as to afford additional opportunity for promotion to bring about an additional increase in pay, an increase in allowance for quarters, fuel, and other incidentals that go with it. I think it is the duty of a Member of Congress to undertake to represent as nearly as he knows how the will of his constituents, and if I am convinced of any one thing better than another, it is that the people of my district are opposed to the creation of any more new offices.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I do not think the gentleman understands. This bill does not create any more additional officers for the Coast Guard.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman permit me to reply to him by asking him a question? As I understand it, under existing law there is one office of captain in the Coast Guard. If this bill is passed, there will be seven offices of captain in the Coast Guard. If I understand correctly, under the present law there are six officers with the designation of commander in the Coast Guard, and if this bill passes there will be 12 officers in the Coast Guard with the designation of commander. Is not that creating new offices and carrying with it an increase in pay and allowance and other incidentals? If it is not, then I do not understand the English language.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The total number of commissioned officers in the Coast Guard is 270, and that has not been increased.

Mr. BLACK. Precisely. But the number of captains and commanders is.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. And whereas there have been created six captains and six additional commanders, yet in the pay bill the pay is based not upon rank but upon term of service, years of service, so that with the increase in the number of captains, commanders, and lieutenant commanders the increase in the salary will be practically negligible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that the gentleman from Minnesota asked his question, because it is identically the same proposition that confronted us when the general Army pay bill was before the House. The gentlemen in charge of that bill, and I am not impugning their good faith, because they were acting upon expert testimony of officers of the Army and the Navy, told us that apparently the law made an increase in pay, but that the practical working out of it would be that there would be no increase in the aggregate of the appropriations. I talked this morning with one of the members of the Committee on Appropriations upon our side of the House, and he told me that the committee now has before it an additional estimate for an increase of $3,000,000 in one branch of the service and $600,000 on another small branch of the service, those two branches aggregating an additional expenditure of $3,600,000.

Mr. BRYNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Did not the gentleman, a member of the Committee on Appropriations, state that there was an increase over the pay bill of 1908, but a decrease below the pay which was given to the officers for the fiscal year 1922, by some called the temporary pay bill and by some called the bonus? There is an increase over the 1908 pay, but a decrease from the so-called bonus.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman stated that it was an increase over the base pay.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Over 1908.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; but the point that I am bringing out is that by the technical provisions of these various bills these several branches of the service are seeking and are succeeding in perpetuating as permanent law all of the increases given during the war period, including the expansion of rank due to the extraordinary expansion of the service. I am opposed to saddling such heavy burdens on the taxpayer and will vote against the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DOWELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were presented by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On November 28, 1922:

H. R. 12859. An act to provide for certain expenses incident to the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress;

H. R. 10144. An act conveying the peninsula of Presque Isle, Erie, Pa., to the State of Pennsylvania, its original owner, for public park purposes; and

H. R. 367. An act for the relief of J. Irving Brooks.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE COMMISSIONED LINE AND ENGINEER OFFICERS OF THE COAST GUARD GRADES.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for these five minutes in order to say just a word in regard to the so-called pay bill. My only hesitancy in supporting this measure very enthusiastically is its possible tendency to again place us in the same condition in which we found ourselves before the pay bill was enacted. This condition was that the discrepancies in the pay and allowances in the various services—the so-called military or quasi-military services of the country—were so great that there was great dissatisfaction, sometimes amounting almost to demoralization, in the personnel of all of those services. A joint committee of the two houses, of which I was a member, was finally appointed to consider the matter, and which did consider it through long hearings and quite thorough executive consideration. The bill was then brought into this House, was thoroughly considered here, and finally passed. In this bill there was an attempt to equalize all of these discrepancies. A committee was formed from the various services, from the Army, the Navy, the Coast Guard, and from the other services concerned, and these representatives of the several services worked over the matter in connection with the joint committee for months, trying to work out a satisfactory pay schedule.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. For a brief question.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the gentleman able to state to us wherein this bill increases the pay? It increases the places but not the pay.

Mr. TILSON. I have not attempted to show that these are increases, and that is not the purpose for which I rose. My purpose in speaking here is to warn against a return toward the old order of things by again entering upon the practice of separate raises in all the various services, because that is what went on before and brought us into a condition that was intolerable. Army representatives would appear before the Committee on Military Affairs and urge that the Navy had an advantage in this, that, or the other. The committee would lend a sympathetic ear. Then the Navy representatives would go before the committee presided over by the able gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] and would show wherein the Army had gained some slight advantage. Then the gentleman from Pennsylvania would give them a raise, and so on, through all of the different services.

After considerable effort on the part of the committee, whose labors were approved by congressional action, we thought we had brought the pay of all of these various services into line. In this bill compensation was based upon a number of considerations—upon rank, upon length of service to a considerable degree, and upon other elements that entered into the problem.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Wherein does this bill, as the gentleman sees it, undo or point to the undoing of the pay bill?

Mr. TILSON. In this respect only: At the time the pay bill was considered there was a certain personnel in the Coast Guard supposed to be fairly well balanced. With this well-balanced personnel in mind, the joint committee considered the pay bill and acted, adjusting the scale of pay.

This bill, as I understand it, changes the balance of that personnel. In other words, it raises a larger proportion of the officer personnel to a higher rank than was the case when the pay bill was considered.

Mr. WINSLOW. Had I been wrongly advised, when I was assured by some of those in the conference on the pay bill that the question of inequality of rank of Coast Guard and other officers was a matter of common conversation in the meetings, and regret was expressed by many on that committee that they had not the power to adjust the Coast Guard rank, and that they further expressed the hope that this bill would go through in order that not only the pay might be taken care of, as in the pay bill, and the comparable rank of members of the Coast Guard officers should be raised to put them on a fair equality with the others?

Mr. TILSON. I remember conversations in the committee along that line. It was recognized that the Coast Guard was one of the worst sufferers under then existing conditions; that there was greater inequality and more reason why the bill should be passed to remedy the situation in the Coast Guard than in any other service.

I do not say that this bill does not make a more evenly balanced service; my only point is that it changes the balance at all. The question is whether we ought to again enter upon a series of raises or changes in the various services.

Mr. WINSLOW. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] is a soldier of great repute in New England and the State of Connecticut and country wide, and I would like to ask him as a military man of high rank how he would like a command if he had a colonel under him and no captain, about four first lieutenants, and, as this Coast Guard has to operate, with about 44 second lieutenants, and everything rank in like proportion?

Mr. TILSON. Well, I should not consider that a good balance.

Mr. WINSLOW. What would the gentleman think of a service for which we are paying a lot of money to be allowed to continue under such an inefficient plan as that?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. I yield the gentleman two minutes more. I would like to ask the gentleman if as a military man he would feel that the Government of the United States was wise in expending a great sum of money for the operation of a department which was manifestly unbalanced in the way of officers, when by equalizing them they can completely eliminate that and make them efficient?

Mr. TILSON. The question the gentleman asks answers itself. Of course, the service ought to be evenly balanced. It would not be a well-balanced service if there were 44 second lieutenants and no captain.

Mr. WINSLOW. That is illustrative of what we have in the Coast Guard now, and all we want to do is to even up the service.

Mr. TILSON. I hope that the gentleman is accomplishing it in this bill, and I further hope that there will be no further attempt to change it. I hope that this will be permanent, so that we shall not again enter upon an era of proceeding piecemeal in the several services to unbalance them again. I hope that we now have a pay bill that will last and be satisfactory to the several services and that we shall not soon have to go through the same old struggle of attempting to balance them again.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has again expired.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that the time is under the control of the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Alabama. Under the rules of the House, by which the time of debate is limited, the Chair does not feel competent to entertain the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, in this connection I would like to call the attention of the House to a feature in this class of legislation. Some years ago we had rear admirals, commodores, and captains. In England they had rear admirals and captains but no commodores. Our commodores in England or Shanghai invited out to dinner were outranked by the rear admirals. The result was that our poor fellows had to suffer the infliction when they went out to dinner of going in with the captains. That was considered a debasement of their honor and their character. They came here and appealed to us and we abolished the rank of commodore so that they could all go in to dinner together except a few fellows who were allowed to keep their position for life, but when they die there will be no more commodores. In that connection they selected nine commodores and promoted them to admirals. They never equalize by cutting down but always by promotion. We gave them a higher salary and a better place at dinner. Then up rose the old rear admirals and said, "This is a devil of a situation; must we go in to dinner with these commodores?" And so they split them, calling them the first nine and the second nine. You may think that is a joke, but it is not; it is an absolute fact. They settled the question between them, and the rear admirals of the second nine went in to dinner behind the admirals of the first nine. Now the rank of a brigadier was the same as that of a commodore.

No more commodores. So the Army drew its bill which provided that a brigadier general should have the same rank as a rear admiral. The Navy, of course, rose up in arms and the first rear admiral said, "You can not go to dinner with me." And so the Navy put through a law which provided that a rear admiral of the second nine should have the same place at dinner as a brigadier general. That kind of straightened it out you would think, but it did not, and that has been the cause of a desperate fuss between them ever since, and finally the Secretary of the Navy wrote to me—I was connected just then in a way with some of that legislation—and said that the General Staff and War Council and some of the leading men of the Army and Navy had decided to ignore all that; just to drop out. I said:

> If you will give me time and place I will have the whole outfit court-martialed and shot.

That did not settle it, because I declined to accept their dictates, and so they gravely announced that unless we omitted these laws the Army and Navy could not be administered. It was an awful condition; it could not be administered unless we omitted from the proposed Federal code certain laws you made. Now you may think that I am drawing a long bow, but everything I have said is exactly true. You think it is silly and ridiculous, but you do not think it is half as silly and ridiculous as I did, but at Shanghai it was very embarrassing to go to dinner behind some Englishmen. I have seen it happen there myself. It is embarrassing, especially when ladies are present. It was a question of who should have precedence, and that is important—in the Navy—when ashore.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. May I say to the gentleman that that is exactly the complaint made by some of these officers before the committee; that officers of the Army and Navy, junior in point of years of service, outrank them and treat them with disrespect when they come into contact with them.

Mr. LITTLE. I can not yield any further unless you give me more time. Now, I want to ask your attention—I think I shall vote for this bill, on the whole it is worthy—I want to direct the attention of the Chairman to the awful position in which this new commodore you are going to create is placed.

Mr. WINSLOW. No; commandant.

Mr. LITTLE. He is commandant now, and you are going to make him a commodore.

Mr. WINSLOW. He is a captain commandant by law now.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman said he would be a commodore when he is retired.

Mr. WINSLOW. When he is retired.

Mr. LITTLE. Who is going in to dinner with him? [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTLE. Section 1466 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

> The relative rank between officers of the Navy on the active or retired list and officers of the Army shall be as follows, lineal rank only being considered: Vice admiral shall rank with lieutenant general; rear admirals with major generals; commodores with brigadier generals; captains with colonels.

Referring to page 1005 of the Thirtieth Statutes at Large we find that—

> Each rear admiral embraced in the nine lower numbers of that grade shall receive the same pay and allowances as are now allowed a brigadier general in the Army.

On page 411 of the Fortieth Statutes we find that—

> Brigadier generals of the Army shall hereafter rank relatively with rear admirals of the lower half of the grade.

In a letter of March 1, 1921, to the chairman of the House Committee on Revision of the Laws the Secretary of the Navy said:

> The clause in the act of October 6, 1917, was the subject of the fullest consideration by the experts in both the War and Navy Departments, including the General Staff and the War Council, with the result that the two departments agreed that this provision could not be put into effect and concurred in recommendations to Congress that it be repealed. Inasmuch as the said provision could not be put into effect, its repeal would serve no purpose other than to eliminate it from the statutes, thereby preventing confusion which it might cause in the minds of those not familiar with the subject; whether repealed or not, the fact would be that it was not in effect and could not be put into effect, and therefore could not be regarded as a provision of law which was in effect in 1919.

In a letter to the chairman from the said Secretary under date of May 25, 1920, the Secretary had already said of the act of October 6, 1917, which is from the Fortieth Statutes, page 411:

> So much of said act as provides that brigadier generals of the Army shall hereafter rank relatively with rear admirals of the lower half of the grade is defective and it has been impossible to put it in operation. * * * Therefore all reference to relative rank between brigadier generals and rear admirals of the lower half of the grade should be omitted.

Gentlemen of the House, the General Staff and the War Council have decided that a part of your laws are not in effect, and the Secretary of the Navy instructed the chairman of the Revision Committee to omit from H. R. 12, the bill to establish a Federal code, such portions of your laws as the General Staff and War Council found to be not in accord with their views of what laws should be. If they can reach such a conclusion and make it take effect on one law they can on all laws, and the Congress should be abolished and the War Council and the General Staff left in control of the Capitol. Now, what is the dire and awful condition which precipitates such a revolution in our form of government and invests these autocrats with absolute power? The question is simply whether brigadier generals and rear admirals have the same rank. In time of war there might possibly be times when the question might rise to importance, but now there is nothing to it but a question of precedence in dinner parties. The same question is raised when you make a commodore for the Coast Guard. The same question is raised practically every time the Army and Navy begin to father legislation with regard to their respective duties and privileges. To merely present the subject makes it ridiculous the minute your attention is directed to their views, yet since May 25, 1920, when the Secretary of the Navy directed your committee to omit these laws which you made they have maintained and insisted upon having the General Staff and the War Council permitted to abolish your laws. This is the result of having a Judge Advocate General of the Navy who never read a law book and who arrogates to himself the duty of sitting down and deciding the authenticity and legality of the statutes Congress enacts. I stand in awe of the tremendous consequences which may arise if you make a commodore for the Coast Guard. The department long since took the position and openly stated that the Navy could not be administered unless the law of the Fortieth Statutes, page 411, was omitted, and there was not a thing to it except a little matter of precedence of no consequence whatever. In discussing, gentlemen of the House, the problems of relative rank with the Navy and the Army we are called on to legislate for gentlemen with whom rank and precedence are seriously important, just as they are in the few remaining courts of Europe, and with whom titles are of more importance and receive more consideration than great principles and great accomplishments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time now remaining is as follows: Under the control of the gentleman from Massachusetts there are 17 minutes; under the control of the gentleman from Alabama, 11 minutes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. We have only one more speech on this side. I suggest that the gentleman has more than one speech?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. If the gentleman has more than one speech, I suggest that we divide it.

Mr. WINSLOW. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the time, because I prefer to discuss the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WINSLOW. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, those of us who know the work of the Coast Guard and its service to the country from the time of its organization years ago are proud of its work and proud of its record both in peace and in war. The Coast Guard, as we now know it, was organized in 1915 by combining the then existing Revenue Cutter Service and the Life Saving Service into one organization. The Revenue Cutter Service was organized in the year 1790 and antedates the organization of the Navy. It is true that we had a Continental Navy during the Revolutionary War, but with the end of that conflict this was disbanded, and the new Government organized what we now call the Coast Guard Service before it organized a Navy.

In times of peace its 270 officers and about 4,000 enlisted personnel are kept busy at sea in patroling icebergs, rescuing stranded ships, patroling the seal grounds of Alaska, and in general life-saving work on the coast and on the Great Lakes. Its officers are real navigators.

The original act placed upon this organization the duty of defending the coasts of the country. It has been engaged in every war that this country has ever been engaged in with the exception of the naval war against Tripoli. An examination of its history will show how well it rendered service during the various wars that our country has been engaged in. During the late war the whole organization was immediately transferred for the emergency from the Department of the Treasury and became a part of our naval forces. Some of its officers were in command of our large troop transports. It shared with the Navy in the credit for transporting 2,000,000 of our soldiers overseas with the loss of hardly a man. It was a revenue cutter, the Tampa, which, aside from the Cyclops, sustained the greatest single naval loss of ours in the war. This ship was engaged in antisubmarine work off the coast of Europe, and after successfully convoying over 300 ships during a period of many months finally became a victim to a submarine attack and went down with its 115 men, but the convoy it was then in charge of was saved. All of its officers and men gave the very best account of themselves during the Great War and lived up to the very highest traditions of the service of this most efficient organization.

It developed during the war that many of these officers holding low rank after many years in the service were outranked by much younger men and with considerably less years of service in the Navy. The Navy needed these Coast Guard officers for the higher positions on account of their years of experience and their ability. Temporary legislation was enacted during the war making possible temporary promotion in the Navy in order to meet this situation. However, with the coming of peace these men went back to their former grades and their former pay. This left a discrimination against the officers of the Coast Guard in both rank and pay. The discrimination in pay was eliminated by the passage of the general pay bill last spring, which based pay upon years of service primarily rather than upon rank and grade. The Coast Guard was included, of course, in this legislation.

This joint committee on pay did not have jurisdiction over this discrimination in rank. Your committee, in the bill before us, has endeavored to correct at least in part this discrimination in rank and grade.

There are something like four or five thousand men in the Coast Guard. Under existing law the commandant has a rank comparable to that of captain in the Navy. In the Navy an officer with that responsibility would have the rank and grade of a rear admiral, lower half. This bill confers upon the commandant that rank. It involves no increase whatever in his pay.

For more efficient administration purposes the Coast Guard has divided the country into districts. Under existing law the officer in charge ranks as a commander. In the Navy an officer with similar responsibilities would rank as a captain. We have therefore provided six captains in order to meet that situation. We then have increased the commanders from 6 to 12 and have increased the number of lieutenant commanders to the number of 4. We have made no increase in the total number of commissioned officers.

Now, this increase in the number of officers of higher rank involves practically no increase in pay. It will run about $13,000 per year, which is practically negligible as compared with the total sum paid for salaries under existing law.

Let me call your attention to this, that the proportion of higher rank officers in the Coast Guard is somewhat lower, considerably lower, than the proportion of higher rank officers in the Navy, the Army, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and in the Marine Corps. In the hearings, on page 38, will be found the percentages. In the Army the total number of officers authorized is 15,000 in round figures. In the Army the percentage of officers above the rank of major, corresponding in the Navy to lieutenant commanders, is 8.9, and in the Coast Guard it is 2.9. In the Navy the percentage is 12 per cent, as against the Coast Guard of 2.9. In the Marine Corps the percentage is 8.1, and in the Coast Guard it is 2.9. In the Public Health Service it is 7.2, as against 2.9 in the Coast Guard, and in the Coast and Geodetic Survey it is 7 per cent, as against 2.9.

Now, then, this bill as we have framed it will not begin to bring that percentage up to what it is in the Army and Navy, and yet the duties performed by these men to whom we are trying to give a rank commensurate with their duties are such that we ought to give it to them.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Does this bill increase the pay of any officer over and beyond what the pay bill gives him? Does it not simply give him an opportunity of promotion to the rank and pay that the Congress has already provided?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes; exactly. The increase in the pay in this bill is practically negligible.

Mr. BUTLER. I wanted to ask that question of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], but I did not have the opportunity. But the gentleman from Minnesota has now answered it. It does not increase the number of officers or the pay?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. APPLEBY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I wish the chart which has been prepared might be brought here from the lobby. I am sure if the Sergeant at Arms will bring it in it will add to the force of the argument.

In the first place, I wish to say I come from the State of New Jersey, along the seashore, where my district, taking in the coast from Sandy Hook at the entrance of New York Harbor to Barnegat Lighthouse, covers a stretch, I think, of nearly 100 miles of seashore property. I have watched the action of the Coast Guard since I was a boy, and am of the opinion that the acts of bravery done by that gallant body of men can not be surpassed by any acts of bravery in any department of the Army and Navy.

The Coast Guard, to begin with, is the old Life Saving Service, amalgamated with the United States Revenue Cutter Service, as they term it. During all of their service these men, especially the seamen, have been on duty 24 hours practically of each day, because the life-saving men, the crews, live apart from their families in the stations supported by the Government. There is no one living along the shore who will not agree with us that a northeast storm is liable to bring a steamer or a schooner ashore, and it is up to this Life Saving Service to get into communication from the shore by aid of a cannon ball, shooting it across the deck or the mast of the boat, and in that way rigging a breeches buoy, which brings the passengers ashore.

Many times that device is used when the weather is too rough to manage a surfboat. These men never stop to argue the question of whether or not they are to put to sea by boat or to shoot the line and bring the passengers ashore. I have seen many a shipwreck in which hundreds of men and women have been landed safely by these coast guards. Since they were amalgamated they have done still better service, because the Government has fitted up their stations with towers. They can see farther at sea and render still more heroic service. There is no reason, in my opinion, gentlemen, why the coast guards should not be placed on a parity with the Army and Navy. [Applause.]

So far as the officers are concerned and so far as the seamen are concerned, they are a specially trained lot of people. You may talk about recruiting them from the Middle West and elsewhere, but I will say to you that the best men in the Life Saving Service are the men who have been brought up on the ocean front, who as boys have been fishermen and have entered the service early in life. And when they once enter the service they very seldom leave it. Their records of bravery are a matter of history. They have been invaluable in this service to the Government, which should be in favor, it seems to me, of equalizing salaries, especially when the pay increase in question amounts to so little; and it seems almost folly that any man should raise a point against the equalization of rank sought to be accomplished by this bill.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. APPLEBY. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. As a matter of fact, these men are in actual, arduous, dangerous service all the time?

Mr. APPLEBY. Yes; for 24 hours each day. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 7 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] has 11 minutes.

Mr. WINSLOW. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] if he desires to speak?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not care to speak now. I would like to get in under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAWES].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Chairman, the Coast Guard Service is the fire department of the sea. It is busy all the year around. We are talking about an increased merchant marine, increased number of ships, and certainly we are expanding our commerce and intercourse with foreign nations.

After long and careful hearings before our committee, I am quite confident that this bill will not cost the American Government to exceed $15,000 a year. All that these men are seeking is a fair deal, equal treatment with the Navy, some little added dignity, some little insignia that will cause the masters of merchant ships and others to give them more respect in the future than they have in the past. It is simply a square deal to a fine branch of our service, which since its incipiency has been called upon by the Navy and all the forces of our Government for effective service and has responded nobly on every occasion. This bill will cost the Government little, and one of the reasons why the House should give it favorable consideration is the fact that in a committee of 21 men who have considered this matter the voices in favor of the bill are almost unanimous. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute. The gentleman from Massachusetts now has five minutes remaining. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is recognized for 11 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee having this bill in charge [Mr. WINSLOW] admitted in his opening statement that the main purpose of the bill is to provide for inequality of payment existing between the various branches of the service, namely, the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, and the like, and that it was considered and reported without regard to the Army pay bill. With the passage of the pay bill, which applies equally to the Coast Guard, there is little warrant for this bill.

I am quite well aware of the insidious attempts that have been made by the Coast Guard Service—formerly the Revenue Cutter Service—to try to put itself on a parity with the Navy. In spite of the good work performed by the Coast Guard, I still believe that in time of peace there is no parity between the two arms of the service. In time of war, when the Coast Guard is called upon, as during the last war, to perform dangerous service, there is a parity; but the special committee of the House and Senate which reported the Army pay bill took that phase of the matter under consideration and provided extra pay and allowances for the officers of the Coast Guard when brought into a war footing.

If the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had considered this bill in connection with the Army pay bill, I feel quite certain that they would not have reported this bill in its present form. The learned gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, asked the question whether this bill will affect salaries. If you pass this bill in its present form, the Army pay bill will raise their salaries. The distinguished gentleman from Connecticut has pointed out to this House the danger of considering this bill piecemeal and making some special differentiation and discrimination as between other branches of the service.

What do we find in the Army and Navy and Coast Guard pay bill that specifically relates to the pay of this service? It was put in there with the idea to extend it to the Coast Guard—not a military branch of the service, but a civilian branch, not much more hazardous than the vocation of any man who sails the ocean in calm and storm.

Mr. LAYTON. What does the gentleman know about that?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have been through more stress and storm perhaps than the able gentleman and physician who hails from the peaceful groves of Delaware.

Mr. LAYTON. No, you have not.

Mr. STAFFORD. On page 2 of the pay bill there is the following provision which relates specifically to the Coast Guard: "During the existence of a state of war, formally recognized by Congress, officers or grades corresponding to those of colonel, lieutenant colonel, major, captain, and first lieutenant of the Army holding their permanent or temporary positions as such, shall receive the pay of the sixth, fifth, fourth, third, and second periods, respectively, unless entitled under the foregoing provisions of this section to the pay of a higher period."

Here is a distinct provision which in time of war will, under the increase ranks as provided in the pending bill, increase the pay of all those officers.

In the Army pay bill what was done for this Coast Guard Service? No branch of the service received greater increases of allowances and salary in the Army pay bill than the Coast Guard Service. I have served here, intermittently, it is true, for a long time, and I remember the attempts made by the old Revenue Cutter Service to get a footing on the same level with the Navy. If they are on a par with the Navy, why are they not entirely taken over by the Navy? It is because the services are not the same. The Coast Guard is fundamentally civilian, and not military; it is mainly of the same character as any kind of seamanship. Why, gentlemen, reading from the report of the committee on the pay bill, under the base pay for commissioned officers of the Coast Guard under the old law, they received a total of $1,035,000. Under the 1920 scale they received a pay of $1,296,000. Under the existing Army and Coast Guard pay bill they receive $1,454,000, an increase of $158,000 even over the temporary pay bill that was in force during the war. Of course these amiable gentlemen connected with the Coast Guard Service, realizing that their increase pay under the temporary pay bill was coming to an end on June 30 last, introduced a bill providing for a permanent increase. We can not criticise them for that, but I base my opposition to it on the fact that no member of the committee has stated that he has given this bill any consideration in connection with the existing pay bill that applies to all these services, and every one who has studied that law even casually knows that the allowances for rental and subsistence are based upon grade and that they increase with grade. The base pay of a colonel under the pay bill varies from $3,500 to $4,000, and the allowances for subsistence vary from $960 to $1,440, and for rentals from $219 to $438. Under the base pay bill the number of allowances that are granted is based and determined upon the grade, and these Coast Guard men are making an insidious effort now to increase their grade.

Why, whoever heard of a constructor in the Army or Navy receiving rank and allowances. Why, we have many draftsmen in the service connected with the Army and Navy, and many constructors who have no rank, and no allowances for rent and subsistence, as this bill provides.

Mr. BUTLER. No; not constructors.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where in the Army and Navy do any constructors receive rank and allowances as in this bill?

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. The positions of constructor in the Navy are entirely occupied by first-class graduates of the Naval Academy.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here we have a civilian who came in years back, as many of these other men did, and by reason of this higher rank and these allowances you are going to dignify this civilian with a rank and give him allowances. I believe, and the chairman of the committee admits, that as this bill was not considered in connection with the pay bill to which it so directly relates, it should be recommitted to that great committee and be considered in connection with that bill. No hearings of any kind have been had, as far as this bill is concerned, since the pay bill was reported or passed by Congress.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. The gentleman is discussing the increased cost under this bill. Did not the gentleman hear a statement by the chairman that it will not increase the cost exceeding $15,000?

Mr. STAFFORD. I questioned the chairman of the committee, and he was very kind to give me the best information he had, because there is nothing in the report that relates to increased cost. But when I see in the bill a provision made for additional numbers of commanders and lieutenant commanders—and under the bill a lieutenant commander will have the same status as a major—when I see an increased number of lieutenants and captains I know that when you increase those numbers, and they admit that it is going to provide more captains and commanders, that necessarily under the pay bill it gives them a greater allowance for subsistence and rentals. That accounts for the tremendous increase in the appropriation bill. The bill reported this morning contains an increase of $2,000,000 for pay of commissioned officers in the Coast Guard over that carried by last year's bill.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Let me call the gentleman's attention to a fact which he seems to have overlooked, that in the pay bill the pay is not based on grade and rank but the period of service.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have not said it was based on grade. I said, and no man will contradict me, that the allowance for subsistence and rental is based upon grade.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. If the gentleman will refer to section 6 he will find that the allowance for rentals and quarters is based on periods of service and not on grades.

Mr. STAFFORD. I call the gentleman's attention to section 5, which relates to allowances for subsistence, and section 6 relates to allowances for rental and is of the same general nature. I would not take this stand if I had not given this prior consideration. Section 6 the gentleman refers to relates to allowances for rentals.

I call attention to section 5 which says:

> To each officer of any of the said services receiving the base pay of the first period the amount of this allowance shall be equal to one subsistence allowance, to each officer receiving the base pay of the second, third, or sixth period the amount of this allowance shall be equal to two subsistance allowances, and to each officer receiving the base pay of the fourth or fifth period the amount of this allowance shall be equal of three subsistence allowances.

Section six makes greater differences in allowances for rental than section five as based on rank held by the officer.

By the provisions of this bill they admittedly raise the grade of these officers, civilian officers, in time of peace. Its purpose is to increase rank and increase officers in the higher ranks, and thereby increase their allowances in time of peace and their pay and allowances in time of war.

The Coast Guard was adequately taken care of in the pay bill, but it does not seem to know when to stop in its demands.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has five minutes remaining.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, it is quite impossible for me in five minutes to correct the mistakes which have been uttered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, who has just preceded me. He seems to be on the wrong track altogether. I will undertake to reply to as many of his propositions as I can think of in the limited time at my disposal.

In the first place, I have here said not once but several times that the bill in the first instance came to the committee with the consideration involved of pay and rank, and that in the course of time the pay bill had been passed and that took out from our consideration the matter of pay. I said in connection with the discussion that an additional $13,000 would have to be made under the provisions of this bill because of the increase of a few officers—15 to 20—in several grades.

Our committee know about the progress of the pay bill, and we followed it and referred to it, and it was talked of by the members of the Coast Guard, who had to do with the bill while being framed and put in proper order. Nothing could represent more a flight of fancy, weird and lurid imagination, than the statement that this Coast Guard was a pink-tea organization. [Laughter.] Ye gods! When everything else fails and there is no man to be found to go out and tackle a wreck or a derelict or anything of that sort at sea, these fellows go out and it makes no difference what time—day or night, Sundays, or any other time—they throw a line to the ship in distress, hitch onto it, and if it breaks, no matter what kind of a sea, they go back again with another line, go out in small boats and do the work in the nastiest seas, and take more risk in seamanship than the members of the Navy ever do. [Applause.]

I am for the Navy and with the Navy, but that is not a seamanship job in the sense of the hazard that there is in the Coast Guard Service. The latter is a service for saving property and human life. It is an absolutely different job from that of the Navy.

The Navy goes out for the most part under fair skies and conditions, and most of the time they can put in if near the coast and avoid the storm. These Coast Guard fellows in the case of storm have to put out. That is the difference—one goes into it and the other goes away from it. And each has to do his duty according as he conducts himself.

Now, I want to make another suggestion.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Does this service protect the 3-mile limit and the liquor blockade?

Mr. WINSLOW. I assume that that is one of the objections the gentleman from Milwaukee had. Why, there is not a third assistant brew master in a third-class brewery who does not get more money than the best paid officer in the Coast Guard. I do not know but the brewery-wagon driver gets more; but, of course, in one case it is water and in the other it is not. However, that has nothing to do with it.

Here are the duties of the Coast Guard: First of all, to bring it home to every Member, their jurisdiction extends from Alaska down the Pacific, across the Panama Canal—although I may be wrong about that—and up the Atlantic coast, where every few miles there is a life-saving station. Then, of course, they are along the Great Lakes. We all know that. This Coast Guard, with a service of 107 ships, or thereabouts, is all of the time doing the mean, hard, dirty work that has to be done in the saving of property and lives. Then there is the work of the revenue department. If we had any pirates, they would have to chase them. If there is any smuggling in opium and in other things, they have to chase them. They have to maintain our great American fisheries in Alaska and around that point, and they stay up there in the cold of winter among the icebergs. All of the officers, from ensign up, have to do a turn at that service.

It is a hard-working service, and, if I have any judgment in the matter, as a matter of personal opinion I would say that to the ordinary navigator who went from the Coast Guard into the Navy in time of war and ran transports or worked in the Mediterranean, it must have seemed like a summer vacation as compared with the work that he had to do in patrolling and guarding the coast of the United States as a regular job. Of course, in war time, having big ships, they might strike a mine, and perhaps did strike mines; but they are in danger of striking what is the same as mines every time they head toward shore in a storm with a big ship in tow. They are educated men, just as highly educated as any officer of the Navy or any other officer of the Government. They are fine engineers. This talk that was put out here just before I rose about giving rank to a constructor seems ridiculous. As I understand it—and I hope I am not in error—at Annapolis they take the first 10 men of every class, in standing, and make constructors out of them, and they go right up to the rank of admiral, right straight along. Now, because there happens to be a man or two who are constructors in the Coast Guard, requiring equal wit, we have blackguarded the attempt to give them a little rank commensurate with their responsibilities and attainments. The Coast Guard may be a little brother of the Navy; yes; but I am reminded of the comparison that the president of a railroad made who wanted to get a pass over the New York Central. He sent in his name to the president of the New York Central, who said that he did not find the name of the president of this other railroad in Poore's Manual. He said, "I do not know your railroad." The little man said, "Well, what of it?" The president of the New York Central replied, "Why, we are a great big four-track line, and you are asking a pass over that and wanting to give one over yours in return." The little man replied, "You may have four lines of track, but the gauge of none of your track is any wider than that of mine." So it is with respect to this Coast Guard. It may be a little brother, but it is a twin, and it is just as important in the work of the family in carrying on the working of the Government as any other branch of the service. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the number of permanent commissioned line officers of the Coast Guard now authorized by law shall be distributed in grades, as follows: One commandant, 7 captains, 12 commanders, 35 lieutenant commanders, 37 lieutenants, and 77 lieutenants (junior grade) and ensigns; and the number of permanent commissioned engineer officers now authorized by law shall be distributed in grades, as follows: One engineer in chief, 3 captains (engineering), 6 commanders (engineering), 12 lieutenant commanders (engineering), 22 lieutenants (engineering), and 42 lieutenants (junior grade) (engineering) and ensigns (engineering). Promotions to the grades created by this act, namely, captain, captain (engineering), and commander (engineering), shall be made from the next lower grade by seniority: Provided, That lieutenants and lieutenants (junior grade), both line and engineering, may be promoted, subject to examination as provided by law, without regard to number or length of service in grade, to such grades in the Coast Guard not above lieutenant commander or lieutenant commander (engineering) as correspond to the permanent ranks and grades that may be attained in accordance with law by line officers of the regular Navy of the same length of total commissioned service, and officers thus promoted shall be extra numbers in their respective grades, which extra numbers shall not at any one time exceed the following, respectively: Twenty lieutenant commanders, 15 lieutenants, 15 lieutenant commanders (engineering), and 8 lieutenants (engineering), but no officer shall be promoted under this proviso who would thereby be advanced in rank ahead of an officer in the same grade and corps whose name stands above his on the official precedence list: Provided further, That captains and captain (engineering) shall have the rank of, and be of corresponding grade to, captains in the Navy, and commanders (engineering) shall have the rank of, and be of corresponding grade to, commanders in the Navy.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have been asked to relate an experience I once had with the Coast Guard that might throw some light upon the character of work they are doing. In February, 1896, in crossing the Atlantic Ocean on the steamship St. Paul, of the American Line, we were in a race with the Campaignia, a competing British liner. That this 3,000-mile race continued for six days was not the fault of the passengers. At all events, as we approached New York Harbor we encountered a severe storm and a dense fog. At night we lost our way and also made a mistake in reading the soundings. We found ourselves grounded off the coast of New Jersey. We happened to be near a Coast Guard station. They fired a line across, another line was brought across, and then another, by means of which the captain of the Coast Guard reached our vessel in a breeches buoy, communicated directly with the commander of the vessel, and made arrangements as to what was to be done. They found it impossible by the use of a powerful tug, which was sent down from New York, to move the vessel, to pull her off the bottom. She remained there for two weeks battled by the waves. All during the forenoon of the day that we struck I saw the boys we are talking about here in this bill fight with the treacherous waves trying to get a lifeboat out to our vessel. They would run into the water pushing their boat, fighting the waves, until they were up to their hips, leap into the boat, grab the oars, and fight manfully to propel the boat out to where our vessel was grounded. Time and again they were carried back. Time and again they fought their way and came forward. They kept up the fight for six hours before the storm had quieted enough that they could reach our ship. In the meantime another vessel had been brought down from the city of New York and anchored in deep water, half a mile away. A ladder or stairway was put down on the outside of our vessel, with a little platform at the bottom. The passengers were then sent down that stairway one at a time and stood on the platform while the life-savers by terrific effort brought their boat, fighting the angry waves, under the platform. We were commanded to jump. We jumped into the boat, 8 feet below, and the waves would then carry it 50 or 75 feet away. These men by heroic efforts would bring the boat back again, and another man would be commanded to jump. One after another we jumped into the boat until they had about 12 of us, and then they fought the waves on out to where the big boat was anchored in deeper water. I said to some one here a moment ago that I thought those waves were running as high as the statue on the Capitol dome. I know they were running as high as the dome itself, because I rode them. When we reached the other boat, it was a case of jump up, while they caught us by our hands and pulled us in. Then the Coast Guard would go back for another load, over and over again, until they had taken off, as I remember it, about 350 passengers. All were saved.

It was an unusual experience for a landlubber to ride ocean waves mountain high in a rowboat, and it has always impressed upon me the importance of the Coast Guard and the character of the work they are doing. I am heartily in favor of this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the title of captain commandant in the Coast Guard is hereby changed to commandant. Hereafter the commandant shall be selected from the active list of line officers not below the grade of commander and shall have, while serving as commandant, the rank, pay, and allowances of a rear admiral (lower half) of the Navy: Provided, That any officer who shall hereafter serve as commandant shall, when retired, be retired with the rank of commandant and with the pay of a rear admiral (lower half) of the Navy on the retired list, and that an officer whose term of service as commandant has expired may be appointed a captain and shall be an additional number in that grade; but if not so appointed, he shall take the place on the lineal list in the grade that he would have attained had he not served as commandant and be an additional number in such grade: Provided further, That the engineer in chief, while so serving, shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a captain (engineering) in the Coast Guard, and hereafter the engineer in chief shall be selected from the active list of engineer officers not below the grade of lieutenant commander (engineering): And provided further, That an officer who shall hereafter serve as engineer in chief shall, when retired, be retired with the rank of engineer in chief and with the pay of a captain (engineering) on the retired list, and that an officer whose term of service as engineer in chief has expired may be appointed a commander (engineering) and shall be an additional number in that grade; but if not so appointed, he shall take the place on the lineal list in the grade that he would have attained had he not served as engineer in chief and be an additional number in such grade: And provided further, That a constructor, after 10 years' commissioned service in the Revenue Cutter Service and Coast Guard, shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a lieutenant commander, and after 20 years' commissioned service the rank, pay, and allowances of a commander.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Page 3, line 8, after the word "provided," strike out the word "that" in line 8, and all of lines 9, 10, and 11, down to and including the word "and" in line 12.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the part of the bill to which my amendment is directed provides that when the commandant of the Coast Guard has served in that capacity he shall draw the pay of a rear admiral (lower half) of the Navy. Immediately following that provision is a proviso that any officer who shall hereafter serve as commandant shall when retired draw the retired pay of a rear admiral (lower half) of the Navy, and this language which I seek to strike out not only means that if he is retired while actually serving as commandant he shall receive this pay of rear admiral (lower half) of the Navy but if at any time he has ever served as commandant of the Coast Guard and shall thereafter be retired he will draw such retirement pay. The language immediately following that proviso provides that after such officer of the Coast Guard has served his term as commandant he shall be eligible for appointment to the grade of captain in the service. Now, I have no quarrel with that provision, because it might be very proper that he continue in the Coast Guard Service, and we all understand that these commandants are appointed by the President and serve for a term of four years. It might be a very proper thing that after four years of service as commandant that he be appointed to the grade of captain, so I do not seek to strike out that provision. If my amendment is adopted it will only strike out that part of the bill which provides for the retirement of these commandants not at their own rank but at the rank of a rear admiral (lower half) of the Navy.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the amendment of the gentleman is adopted it would not automatically preclude any commandant from being appointed to serve as captain, because if they are eligible to be retired upon the expiration of their term as commandant at the pay of a rear admiral then, of course, they would hesitate to go back and assume the rank of captain when if retired as a captain they are retired only on the pay of a captain?

Mr. BLACK. That, of course, might occur, but at the present time the commandant of the Coast Guard, if I remember correctly, is only 45 years of age.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no; he has been in the service 44 years.

Mr. BLACK. Perhaps the gentleman is correct. I was just quoting from a hurried reading of the report, and on closer examination I find that it is the engineer in chief, Mr. Q. B. Newman, who is 45 years of age.

Mr. BARKLEY. The President, of course, would appoint as commandant a man in the rank of captain under this new law?

Mr. BLACK. Naturally.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is not one of these men who has not been in the service now for 36 years, so they would be eligible for retirement upon the completion of their term as commandant at the pay of a rear admiral.

Mr. BLACK. Not if my amendment is adopted. But even if it were so that does not present any reason why my amendment should not be adopted. My contention is that when an officer, either in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, is retired he should be retired on the rank and pay of the grade he is then serving and not at a higher rank.

The retirement provisions for Army, Navy, and Coast Guard officers are liberal enough now without adding to them such provisions as the one my amendment seeks to strike from the bill.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas. The gentleman says he has no quarrel with the clause wherein provision is made for the selection of a commandant with the rank of a rear admiral, but he objects to the retirement provision. Now, in the drawing of the present bill we have followed existing law with reference to the same proposition, which is as follows:

Any officer who shall hereafter serve as captain commandant shall when retired be retired with the rank of captain commandant and with the pay of a colonel in the Army on the retired list.

So the existing law being as it is we changed it only so as to give the commandant the rank of rear admiral, thereby continuing the whole thing in principle and permitting him to retire with the rank of rear admiral.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman says under existing law when a captain commandant is retired he retires with the pay of a retired colonel in the Army. Now, how can that pay correspond with the retired pay of an admiral of the lower grade when the retired pay of an admiral in the lower grade exceeds that of a colonel in the Army?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Of course when this provision of the law of 1908 was passed we then had the 1908 base pay, but since then we have the new pay bill wherein pay is based primarily on years of service. Under the terms of this new pay bill the present commandant with rank as a captain would draw more pay than a rear admiral (lower half). This particular provision would apply then to a man of 40 or more years of service and would not confer upon him any additional allowance than what he would have had he remained and retired as a captain and not as a rear admiral.

Mr. BLACK. Is it not true, under the law that the gentleman read just a moment ago, that the pay of a colonel in the Army at that time corresponded to the pay of a captain commandant?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Exactly.

Mr. BLACK. Is not that the present law?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Is it not a fact that the pay of an admiral in the lower grade is greater than that of a captain commandant and the present provision will——

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. No; under the existing pay bill a rear admiral does not necessarily receive more pay than a captain of 30 or 40 years of service.

Mr. BLACK. Not necessarily; but then it would probably be larger. That is one reason for the language in the law.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Not in the Coast Guard, because of the long term of service of men holding the rank of captain.

Mr. BLACK. If that be true, why write it in the law? If under the provisions of the law without that language the pay would be as great as that of a rear admiral of the lower grade, why write in this bill the language that I have sought to strike out?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The principal object of the whole thing is to permit him to retire with the rank that corresponds to the pay which he receives.

Mr. BLACK. Because he receives a larger pay?

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the new law the captain or commandant corresponds with the rear admiral of the lower grade in the Navy. Under the old law the captain or commandant of the Coast Guard was supposed to correspond with a colonel in the Army.

Mr. BLACK. With the result that they receive a larger amount of retired pay.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may result in that.

Mr. BLACK. Will it not result in that because the rank of commandant corresponds with the rank of rear admiral of the lower grade?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak in reference to the bill without particular reference to the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to speak in reference to the bill without particular reference to the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I was not in the House when section 1 of the pending bill was read. If I had been, I would have made a statement in reference to it. I have a most sympathetic interest for any legislation which seeks to remove some of the injustices that exist under the present law in reference to the Coast Guard Service. The pending bill, however, in my judgment, is too liberal.

In justice to the committee reporting the bill, I recognize when the hearings were had and the bill prepared that the provisions of the joint pay bill had not then been considered. The joint pay bill has now corrected some of the complaints which the Coast Guard Service previously very properly urged against the old law. Let me briefly call attention to one or two provisions of section 1, which I feel are too liberal. I submit the increase in number of captains and commanders is too large when you consider the rule which obtains in reference to officer distribution in the Navy and Marine Corps. In the Navy the following rule obtains: Four captains to every officer above that grade, 7 commanders, 14 lieutenant commanders, 32 senior lieutenants, 43 junior officers.

This bill provides for the Coast Guard twice as many commanders as they now have, which is double the ratio of officer distribution in the Navy. Substantially the same rule of distribution obtains in the Marine Corps as in the Navy. To illustrate, the Marine Corps has now 20,000 enlisted men. The Coast Guard Service, under the bill now pending, will have not exceeding 4,000 enlisted men. In other words, the Marine Corps will have five times the enlisted strength of the Coast Guard, yet the Marine Corps will only have 45 commanders, whereas the Coast Guard under this bill will have 12. If the ratio provided in this bill obtained in the Marine Corps, they should have 60 commanders.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. WINSLOW. The point the gentleman raises is rather an adverse suggestion on account of the higher percentage of officers provided for in this bill, and it strikes me as being a very natural one; and I am led to think so because I studied it over myself. But it did not take long, when I began to look into it, to see why that was so. Now take a field force; it can have its proper proportion of officers that they can pick up in a mathematical order. They can have a quota of privates that come under that formation, a proper proportion so far as the officers go. But when you go into the ship business you must have a commanding officer in order to navigate that ship. The commander of the ship has to have his under officers in accordance with the needs of the ship, and he must have them in the ship.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman from Massachusetts criticises the position I take on the ground that the Marine Corps in peace times is a land force, and for that reason does not require so large a complement of officers as the Coast Guard Service, which is essentially a sea service. In other words, he feels that a service charged with the duty of manning ships is entitled to more officers than a land service.

Mr. WINSLOW. Quite so.

Mr. OLIVER. Now, the Navy is strictly a ship service, and it so happens that the percentage as to officer personnel in the Navy is the same as obtains in the Marine Corps; so the gentleman's criticism of my position can hardly be defended on the ground which he states.

Mr. WINSLOW. The same as the land force?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes; the same as a land force, the proportion being 1, 4, 15, 37, 43.

Mr. WINSLOW. I grant that, and I further grant that if we were to put the Coast Guard in a position of proper equipment with respect to privates, as you might call them, or ordinary seamen, to make the relation whole, it would be possible there; but you could not get a Navy man to put to sea in a dory with the chances that these men take when they go out to rescue an ocean liner.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, may I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I have great respect for the splendid service rendered at all times by the Coast Guard, and it is not my purpose to invite any comparison whatever between the merits of the Navy and the Coast Guard. They are both worthy, efficient, and meritorious. It so happens, however, that there is much hardship service in the Navy on small boats, such as submarines and destroyers; and both the Navy and the Coast Guard are called upon to perform duties in all kinds of weather, which duties often subject the officers and men to many discomforts and dangers. That, however, has nothing to do with the merits of the pending bill. The officers and enlisted personnel in both services are loyal and efficient.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman indulge me a moment?

Mr. OLIVER. Let me finish, first, this thought. I have given the percentage ratio that obtains in both Navy and Marine Corps as to the distribution of officers, and I can but feel that it would be safe and proper to largely follow that rule in the distribution of officers in the Coast Guard Service.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. In just a moment. I am glad my friend, Mr. BUTLER, chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, is on the floor, because I wish to call his attention to another fault in section 1 of this bill. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania will agree with me that it is a bad idea to write into permanent law an authorization for extra numbers. Section 1, however, undertakes to provide for permanent extra numbers. I recognize that many of the officers now in the Coast Guard Service have been denied promotion in the past because of unusual conditions which obtained in that service under the old law, and some excuse might now be offered for carrying some of the present officer personnel as extra numbers, so as to provide for their promotions. This bill, however, provides permanently for extra numbers in the grades of lieutenant commanders and lieutenants. It also provides for one extra number in the grade of captain when the commander reverts to the status of captain under appointment. In other words, you will have in this service not alone the regular, permanent officer personnel, to wit, 1 admiral, 7 captains, 12 commanders, 35 lieutenant commanders, and 37 first lieutenants, but you will have in addition carried as extra numbers the following: 1 captain, 20 lieutenant commanders, 15 senior lieutenants. I can but feel that this is a bad provision of section 1.

The bill should be drafted in a liberal spirit, the Engineer Corps should be allowed grades of captain and commander, and the number of captains and commanders in the line should be increased; but I see no justification for giving to the service eight times as many captains as they now have, twice as many commanders, 24 additional lieutenant commanders, and 15 additional senior lieutenants.

I wish to call attention to another provision of section 1 which I feel is far-reaching and unjustified. This section authorizes promotion from lieutenant in the junior grade to lieutenant and lieutenant commander, irrespective of length of service, or of other rules and conditions which obtain in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps relative to promotions. In other words, this broad authority to thus promote junior lieutenants will not apply to any of the other services. Why should this authority be given by the pending bill to the Coast Guard Service alone?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that the time of the gentleman from Alabama be again extended. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I wish to explain what I had in my mind when I had my colloquy with the chairman of the committee. We have 86,000 enlisted men in the Navy. Does my friend recall that we have 170 or 180 captains, one for every 500 men? Now there are 4,000 of these men, and how many captains do we get?

Mr. OLIVER. You get seven captains.

Mr. BUTLER. About the same proportion. That is what I had in my mind. I want to say to my friend that I will agree with him that this rule ought not have been set, but it is set for the Navy, and we ought to have some way of varying it. We have 86,000 enlisted men. You all recall the difficulty we had in fixing it at 86,000, and the captains in the Navy have been increased since that time. I think we have one now for every 400 or 500 men. I think it is liberal enough there. I think it is too liberal in the Navy.

Mr. OLIVER. I believe the gentleman's position is that in the Navy the officer strength should be based on the enlisted personnel actually appropriated for.

Mr. BUTLER. I think so.

Mr. OLIVER. And not the authorized strength.

Mr. BUTLER. No.

Mr. OLIVER. The old law bases it on the authorized strength of the Navy. In the Coast Guard Service the authorized strength is not fixed by law but is fixed by Congress in the appropriation bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. We are adopting the same rule, because Congress fixes the authorized strength of this service, and the same rule in the Navy obtains absolutely.

Mr. BUTLER. That is true.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Let me say that in the Navy the men are dealt with in large units by officers of high rank, whereas in this service the units are very small, and we do not have any use for captains.

Mr. BUTLER. The men who command should have the rank.

Mr. OLIVER. Let me read the language in section 1 which I have called attention to as authorizing liberal promotions from the junior grade:

Provided, That lieutenants and lieutenants junior grade, both line and engineering, may be promoted subject to examination as provided by law without regard to number or length of service in grade to such grades in the Coast Guard not above lieutenant commander or lieutenant commander engineer, to correspond with the permanent rank and grade.

Doubtless the committee's reason for inserting that provision was due to the fact that when they were considering this bill there were many worthy officers in the service who had been denied promotions because, under existing law, there were very few officers authorized in the higher grades. The committee then were considering the pay as well as the commission status of these officers, and in order to reward efficient officers with long service this provision was inserted. The joint pay bill which the gentleman from Minnesota refers to took care of that and was passed after this bill was prepared. It will be recalled that the joint pay bill authorizes an officer, after certain length of service, to draw the pay of the next higher grade, thereby giving to such officer what the committee must have had in mind when they wrote this provision in section 1 of the pending bill.

I feel that the pending bill has not been carefully drawn, and I think the reason why it is now open to criticism is due to the fact that the committee, when they were preparing the bill, were seeking to provide for this service before the joint pay bill was enacted, and that had the joint pay bill been passed before this bill was prepared many of the provisions now contained herein would not have been inserted.

Take the last section. I mention it now, because important committee work will prevent me from being present when that section is reached. You are asked to adopt in section 3 a provision long since repealed as to the other services, and now applying to no service. It has been expressly repealed as to the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, and what good reason can now be advanced why the last proviso in section 3 should be reenacted for the Coast Guard Service alone?

If you pass the bill in its present form, giving a preferential right to senior and junior lieutenants to be advanced irrespective of length of service, and reviving only for the Coast Guard, as section 3 undertakes to do, a law long since repealed as to all other services, you will unquestionably have the other services later demanding this same legislation.

The main argument in support of the joint pay bill for Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Public Health Service, Geodetic Survey, and Coast Guard was to place all of the services on the same basis. The joint pay bill has been passed and all the services have been placed on the same basis; then why should you now seek to give, by this bill, rights as to promotion and retirement that do not obtain in reference to any of the other services?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask for just one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks that his time be increased one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. This provision in section 3 which seeks to give to officers when retired advanced rank should not be adopted. Certainly the law in reference to promotions and retirements in the services covered by the joint pay bill should be uniform, and I hope that the House, when it comes to consider section 3, will strike out the proviso which gives to officers in the Coast Guard Service retirement rights denied to officers in every other service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That hereafter no commissioned officer of the Coast Guard shall be promoted to a higher grade or rank on the active list, except to commandant or to engineer in chief, until his mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform all the duties of such higher grade or rank have been established to the satisfaction of a board of examining officers appointed by the President, and until he has been examined by a board of medical officers and pronounced physically qualified to perform all the duties of such higher grade or rank: Provided, That if any commissioned officer shall fail in his physical examination for promotion and be found incapacitated for service by reason of physical disability contracted in the line of duty, he shall be retired with the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted: Provided further, That hereafter when a commissioned officer of the Coast Guard who has had 40 years' service shall retire he shall be placed on the retired list with the rank and retired pay of one grade above that actually held by him at the time of retirement; and, in the case of a captain, the rank and retired pay of one grade above shall be the rank of commodore and the pay of a commodore in the Navy on the retired list.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 2, after the word "promoted," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to discuss this amendment at any considerable length, because the question presented has been ably discussed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], who for many years was a member of the Naval Affairs Committee and who had a great deal to do with the framing of the general Army and Navy pay increase bill, some of which he ably and vigorously opposed. I do not believe that we ought at this time to pass a law to retire one particular class of commissioned officers and provide that they shall be placed on the retired list with the rank and retired pay of one grade above that actually held by them at the time of retirement. It may be said in defense of this provision that it only applies to officers who have served 40 years. It is not an unfortunate thing for a man to be attached to a good position for 40 years. I see no calamity in that. It looks to me like good fortune. There are some of us who perhaps would like to have the record of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, Uncle JOE CANNON, and serve our district as he has served his district in the House for over 40 years. We would be very glad to do that without any retirement pay.

Now, I think that we are going far enough and are displaying generosity enough when we retire these men at the rank and retirement pay of the grade which they are holding at the time of retirement.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman's contention is natural, but, like many another case, he has not gone through with the thought about it. In the Navy, when a man gets to be 56 years old, if he has not reached the rank of a rear admiral, he is retired automatically, and that takes care of him. But he has had a chance to go on and be a rear admiral or a vice admiral or an admiral and get all the attending benefits. But under the arrangement of this bill there is no such opportunity for the Coast Guard officer. No better answer can be made to the gentleman from Texas than a quotation from the report on this bill. I will read it:

Referring to the last proviso of section 3, an officer in the Army or Navy who has had 40 years' service has reached, in a large majority of cases, the grade of brigadier general or rear admiral, and, when retired, will retire with such rank. This bill provides for no rank for officers on the active list of the Coast Guard above that of captain, except in the one case of the commandant. Having in mind the limitation in opportunity for advancement, as compared with that existing in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, that will exist in the Coast Guard even under the terms of this bill, it is thought that a commissioned officer who has served his country faithfully for 40 years should, when retired, have the privilege of retiring in the next higher grade.

The grade next above captain in the Coast Guard will be, under the terms of this bill, that of commandant. A captain of over 40 years' service, but who has never in fact served as commandant, should not have on the retired list the title of commandant; hence such an officer, under the language in section 3, would have the rank of commodore. The pay of a commodore in the Navy on the retired list is the same as that of a rear admiral (lower half) on the retired list.

The point is this: Where, as in the Coast Guard, officers can never get pay, save in the case of commandant, above the rank of captain, they can serve more years than would retire them in the Navy. They could keep right on to the age of 64 and give perfectly good service, which would make them in the Navy a rear admiral, or in the Army a brigadier general at least. Yet they never get above the rank of captain in the Coast Guard, and the idea here is to do something which will give the Coast Guard officers the benefit accruing from long, faithful, and efficient service with a chance, in that way, to retire one grade up, which, according to the terms of the bill, is with the rank of commodore.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman recognizes that in these retirement laws one branch of the service uses one precedent in order to get legislation for its particular branch of the service. Does not the gentleman believe that if we enact a provision of this kind then the Navy will be coming to Congress asking that when their officers are retired they be retired at the rank and pay just above that they are holding at the time of retirement?

Mr. WINSLOW. It may be that the Navy will be thus coming to Congress.

Mr. BLACK. And does the gentleman think we should set such a precedent?

Mr. WINSLOW. I think they may be coming to Congress, but because they come is no reason for us to grant their request. We are now trying to establish equality between these Coast Guard men and the Navy, as the Navy is to-day. When the Navy wants to come for more, which will put them up again ahead of the general establishment level, it will be the time to deny the Navy.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. It is my recollection that below the rank of lieutenant commander in the Navy, when an officer is retired he has the advantage of increased rank. Consequently this bill seems to me to be like unto that provision of the Navy, as I recall it.

Mr. WINSLOW. It so follows.

Mr. BUTLER. Very few of these men will ever reach the rank above that of commander, and the rank of commander corresponds to that of major in the Army. The retired pay would not be very great, even after 40 years' service. I have had it all figured out because I feel somewhat economical these days, and I wanted to know what this provision in the bill would cost. Has the gentleman from Massachusetts had it figured out as to how much this will cost additional? The difference in pay by reason of this provision in the case of a commander when he is retired as a captain will be about $187.50 a year more.

Mr. WINSLOW. There are only a few who are likely to retire in the next 10 years.

Mr. BUTLER. It is only a trifle, and the chances are that but few will ever get above the rank of commander. If one does, then he ought to have the chance in his old age to retire with $187.50 more.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of giving expression to my great appreciation of this work. When we understand what the Coast Guard Service means, with tens of thousands of miles of coast to guard which the United States requires, and when we understand the splendid service that has been rendered and is being rendered by this devoted band of men, and when we realize that we have not even rendered ordinary justice to them, I feel that when justice is being done we ought not to hesitate. This service is in many respects the most dangerous and the hardest service done by any single body of men in the service of the United States, and when we take that into consideration I think we might well be excused if we are even a little generous in our treatment of them. I myself have seen something of the work of these men, although I have not had great opportunity to observe it. They have my admiration. I have learned from others what they have done for the country in the hours when such work was most needed. I have learned of their splendid courage, of their fortitude, of their readiness to serve even when it would seem they were not under obligation to serve, when reason seemed to dictate that they should not serve, and I feel I ought to say at least a word in praise of such service and ask this committee to deal with them justly in the passage of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. Whenever a change is suggested as to some provision of this bill which sets a bad precedent the only argument that we have against the proposed change is some eulogy of the service of the Coast Guard. All of us admit that the service is first class, the very best that anyone could wish, and what has been said in behalf of the service by a few could be said by all. However, that is no reason, that is no argument for passing this bill with this provision in it, which may set a very dangerous precedent that will hereafter plague us. When this bill was first read and when the distinguished chairman of the committee was explaining its provisions I called attention to this particular provision in the bill now sought to be stricken out by the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. BLACK] and I asked the chairman what was the precedent for it. He said that there was a provision giving this same privilege to the naval officers. I understand that has all been done away with. I understand there is no provision now for retirement of any officer of the Government at a grade higher than that which he held at the time of retirement. If that is not the case, I would like to have some one correct me. If there is no law, then, now retiring any officer of this Government at a grade higher than that held by him at the time of his retirement, why begin this precedent over again? Why give the Navy Department an excuse to come back to us and say that we did it for the Coast Guard and should do it for them? Why give the Army an excuse to say that because we did it for the Coast Guard we should do it for them? Why continue this clamor made by these various departments of the Government? I think the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. BLACK] ought to be agreed to by this House and this bad feature of the bill stricken out.

I think we should adopt the suggestion made by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] that the bill should go back to this committee, to be carefully considered by it, which was also suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], so that the committee may view it with regard to the pay bill. They would then find out exactly what the bill means and what its results will be. It is mere guesswork now, based on the suggestion of one or two parties as to what its provisions may result in in the way of cost. I think the Black amendment should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BLACK) there were—ayes 22, noes 65.

Mr. BLACK. I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That an ensign, an ensign (engineering), or a district superintendent with the rank of ensign, shall be required to complete three years' service in his grade, after which he shall be eligible for promotion to the next higher grade without regard to the number already in that higher grade.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I make this motion in order to discuss for a few minutes the provisions of the bill and also some of the arguments made during this discussion. One of the objections raised is that the provision in section 1 fixing the number of officers is too liberal. I am not on the committee reporting the bill, but because I served on the special committee that reported the pay bill I have considered the provisions of this bill in connection with the pay bill. I find that the provisions of section 1 merely seek to apply to the Coast Guard the same law that now regulates the commissioned personnel of the Navy. In fact, it is not as liberal as the law governing the Navy. In the Navy the number of line officers is regulated by 4 per cent of the enlisted personnel.

Mr. BUTLER. They have more than 4 per cent now.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman is correct, then the provision in section 1 is not as liberal as that of the Navy. Now, in the staff corps of the Navy there is no limit other than——

Mr. BUTLER. As many as they can get.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Other than the limitation as to the grade of his running mate in the line, with which the gentleman from Pennsylvania is more familiar than I am. But in this bill there is a specific limitation, so that the provision is not as liberal as that governing the Navy nor of the Army.

Now the other thing to which I want to refer is this: It was stated that as a result of the pay bill there is an estimate before the Committee on Appropriations of $2,000,000 more than last year for pay for the Coast Guard. Now the fact is that that is incorrect. It is a statement that could easily be made by any gentleman, because he would be deceived by the estimates submitted to the Committee on Appropriations and by the statistical report of that committee. The fact is that if my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] will look at the hearings on the Treasury bill, he will find that of the amount estimated for, $640,000 is to be made immediately available to take care of a deficiency existing this year, and, as a matter of fact, the Coast Guard is the one service that has submitted an estimate to the Committee on Appropriations for pay for the year 1924 that is less than was estimated for when the pay bill was under discussion. [Applause.] They estimated when the pay bill was under discussion that they would need $40,000 more than they now find will be actually needed, which shows they were exceedingly conservative in their estimates, and justifies confidence in their statements.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I know what my good friend is referring to. And that is why I do not yield in the few minutes I have. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that if he will look at the estimate, I do not blame him——

Mr. STAFFORD. Look at the report.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. He will be deceived by it because it does not appear there that when the Treasury bill containing the appropriations for the Coast Guard Service passed the Congress last year it was based on the law of 1908, and it did not include the temporary pay or bonus. After that when the Army and Navy bill went through in the latter part of the session there was added in the Senate the additional amount made necessary by the pay bill, but the Coast Guard Service does not have sufficient money for the pay of the officers and the allowances which were provided for in the pay bill. Now they have got to come in and get that money. The Budget Bureau instead of submitting an estimate for a deficiency merely included the $640,000 in the estimate for next year, asking that it may be made immediately available, and that deceived the gentleman from Wisconsin. The actual fact is it is $600,000 more than the 1908 law, and $200,000 less than was appropriated under the act of 1919 for all years since that time.

Mr. BUTLER. I have doubted very much whether that new pay bill was going to result in a saving of money to this Government. They told me it is going to save $28,000,000 in actual money.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It saved you in this year $240,000 for the Coast Guard alone. It is going to save just what was estimated, but not $28,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. I know, but how much more will the Coast Guard cost this next year than two years ago?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It will cost you $200,000 less than it has cost since you passed the temporary pay act or bonus, as you prefer to call it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was making my statement on the report of the gentleman's committee. I thought that was absolutely O. K.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Of course, I am not on the subcommittee on the Treasury which made that report. That was the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

The difference between the gentleman and myself was that when I read that statement I saw it was wrong. If you will look at page 232 of the hearings you will find, as I have found, the explanation—that the large increase is due to the $640,000 which is included in the estimate for next year, but will be spent this year, and the amount for rations.

Mr. BUTLER. Now let us fix it in mind once for all. The gentleman has the figures.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, may I have three minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman tell us how much more the Coast Guard will cost us in the coming year than it cost us prior to the time we put the bonus on?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It will cost you $600,000 more than the old law of 1908.

Mr. BUTLER. Consequently, we shall not have the result of making any saving of $28,000,000 by reason of this pay bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Nobody ever contended at the time the pay bill was under consideration—nobody who was familiar with the bill—that it meant any saving under the law of 1908. It was stated time and time again that it meant an increase over the law of 1908, and the House voted for it because they thought there should be an increase over the law of 1908. That was the purpose of the legislation, to prevent a return to the pay of 1908, which would have demoralized the services. But we did claim there would be a decrease under the bonus act, and there will be.

Mr. BUTLER. It would be 33 per cent?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not know the percentage. It is $200,000 less than the pay you provided in your bill in 1918 or 1919, and $600,000 more than the law of 1908. And the saving is $40,000 more than we said at that time would be saved. I feel satisfied the savings estimated at the time of the passage of the pay bill will be made.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. What part of that saving will be from the enlisted personnel?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. A considerable percentage in the Army. There are so many enlisted men as compared with officers that the largest saving must be from the enlisted men. There will also be some saving from the men in the Navy, but not as much. It has in no way affected recruiting, as the service now offers to the enlisted man greater opportunities if he remains in it. As I understand the bill there are 12 men who will receive an increase in compensation. For all the rest of the commissioned personnel there is no increase. It simply gives to these officers the rank to which they are entitled. They already receive the pay, so I see no objection to giving them the rank. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired.

Mr. STAFFORD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised that my good friend the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], one of the members of the committee who reported the pay bill, is rather sensitive of the progeny that is coming forth as the result of his efforts and those of others on the special committee; but I wish to repeat what I called to the attention of the House in my speech under general debate when I read from the report of the pay bill prepared by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE]. On page 2 of that report we find this estimate, based upon the Budget estimate: Pay of officers of the Coast Guard, if there were no legislation, under the base pay law of 1908, a total of $1,035,925; based on the temporary increased pay law of 1920, $1,296,748, an increase of over $260,000; under the recent pay bill, which has gone into effect, the estimate is $1,454,450, or $418,000 more than what they originally received under the basic pay law prior to the war, a few more than 300 receiving a total increase in pay and allowances of $418,000, more than a thousand dollars to each officer, and yet they are not satisfied.

I have nothing further to submit to the House, because the report on this bill is vapid so far as the expense that will be occasioned by the passage of this bill. I did have a copy of the report of the Committee on Appropriations accompanying the bill introduced this morning, so that I acted in good faith in presenting the figures to the committee, and from the report, on page 14, I called attention, in reference to the Coast Guard, to appropriations for 1923, $6,297,398; estimate for 1924, $8,340,379. Amount recommended in the pending bill, $8,300,000; increase, compared with 1923 appropriation, $2,002,602.

I am not a member of the committee and I have not the benefit of the erudition that comes from membership on the subcomittee reporting that bill, but I rely on the report that was submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], who had charge of the Army and Navy and Coast Guard pay bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Had the gentleman an opportunity to read the hearings?

Mr. STAFFORD. No. I stated that I relied entirely upon the report accompanying the pay bill and on the report accompanying the appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman will permit me, I did not question his good faith in making the statement, but I tell him that it does not state in that report from the Treasury that the sum of $393,000 carried for rations is now carried for allowances.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the report of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] it was estimated that the pay of the commissioned officers of the Coast Guard would be $418,000 more than the original base pay—more, according to that estimate, than any other branch of the service received.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Let me say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that $397,000 heretofore carried in rations for the Coast Guard is now carried in the items contained in the report he has in his hand for pay and allowances, and a corresponding reduction is made in rations.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was not included in the report of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] which accompanied the pay bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Oh, no.

Mr. STAFFORD. In that report he stated that the increased pay for officers of the Coast Guard under the new arrangement would be $418,000 more than the original base pay.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. And I again repeat that the officers of the Coast Guard, under the pay bill, receive greater increases in pay or allowances, which is the same as pay, than any other branch of the service, either Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Public Health Service, or Coast and Geodetic Survey. They never know when they have enough.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and finished the reading of the bill.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10531) to distribute the commissioned line and engineer officers of the Coast Guard in grades, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum of the House is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. WINSLOW. Let us get the previous question ordered.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is too late to withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has announced that no quorum is present.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I did not know the Chair had made the announcement.

Mr. WINSLOW. I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 270 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WINSLOW. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINSLOW. I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and on that motion I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and on that motion he moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] The Chair has counted 217 and there are many more whom the Chair has not counted. A quorum is present.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 214.

Accordingly the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 219, noes 13.

Accordingly the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. WINSLOW, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS (S. DOC. NO. 270).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Congress of the United States:

In compliance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1915, establishing the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, I submit herewith the eighth annual report of the committee for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922.

The attention of the Congress is invited to the presentation by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics of a national aeronautical policy at the conclusion of its report. The constructive recommendations therein contained for the advancement of aeronautics deserve the thoughtful consideration of all Members of the Congress.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 7, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, all days are Thine, whether of cloud or sunshine, whether of adversity or prosperity, and we ask Thy help that we may use them as given to us by Thee for our highest welfare, and that we may serve Thee most acceptably. Be with us through this day, and may every duty be assumed with the consciousness of Thy presence and Thy wisdom; and so lead us onward ever to Thy glory. For Christ Jesus' sake. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

SENATOR FROM MICHIGAN.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I send to the desk a communication from the Governor of Michigan, which I desire to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the communication.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF MICHIGAN, Executive Office, Lansing.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that pursuant to the power vested in me by the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the State of Michigan, I, Alexander J. Groesbeck, the Governor of said State, do hereby appoint JAMES COUZENS a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States until the vacancy therein, caused by the resignation of Truman H. Newberry, is filled by election, as provided by law.

Witness: His excellency our Governor, Alexander J. Groesbeck, and our seal hereto affixed at Lansing, this 29th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1922.

[SEAL.] ALEX. J. GROESBECK, Governor.

By the Governor:

CHAS. J. DELAND, Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The credentials will be placed on the files of the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. COUZENS is present and ready to take the oath.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator appointed will present himself at the desk and receive the oath of office.

Mr. COUZENS, escorted by Mr. TOWNSEND, advanced to the Vice President's desk, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him he took his seat in the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10531) to distribute the commissioned line and engineer officers of the Coast Guard in grades, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PENNSYLVANIA SENATORIAL ELECTION RETURNS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a certificate of the Governor of Pennsylvania, transmitting, in compliance with State law, official returns of the election held on November 7, 1922, in the several counties of the Commonwealth for the offices of United States Senator for the term ending March 4, 1923; for the term beginning March 4, 1923; and for the term ending March 4, 1927, which was ordered to be placed on file.

TRAVELING EXPENSES, UNITED STATES BOTANIC GARDEN.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the director of the United States Botanic Garden, made pursuant to law, showing traveling expenses of officials and employees of the Botanic Garden on official business from Washington to points outside the District of Columbia, fiscal year 1922, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, the thirty-sixth annual report of the commission, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORT OF THE UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 4108) for the relief of Elizabeth A. Maynard; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 4109) to authorize the Baptist National Hospital Association (Inc.) to use and occupy certain land in the Hot Springs National Park, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

A bill (S. 4110) to amend the act of August 15, 1921, entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. HARRELD:

A bill (S. 4111) granting a pension to Augusta Myers; and

A bill (S. 4112) granting a pension to Joseph A. Branstetter; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BAYARD:

A bill (S. 4113) for the relief of Helene M. Layton; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN:

A bill (S. 4114) for the relief of Bertha N. Rich; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4118) to create the Arbitration Commission, United States Shipping Board, and to amend the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10531) to distribute the commissioned line and engineer officers of the Coast Guard in grades, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

The bill (S. 214) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SMOOT. The calendar was called just day before yesterday. Is it advisable to go over it again to-day?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There may be some measures on the calendar that Senators may desire to call up, and an opportunity will be given for those who desire to have a bill considered to move to take it up if we call the calendar in the ordinary way, as I hope it is being called. I have no desire to have the bill just referred to passed over, but I presume it can go over by unanimous consent.

The bill (S. 1467) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1016) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, it seems to me if we are going to take up the calendar in this way absent Senators ought to be apprised of the fact. A good many Senators have been busy in committee rooms this morning.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator we went through the calendar only day before yesterday and every bill on the calendar was called. Any bill can be taken up now on motion.

Mr. SMITH. That is exactly the point I had in mind.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If we have not anything else to do, it gives a Senator who desires it an opportunity to test the Senate as to whether it will consider a bill.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the thought I had in mind.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Frelinghuysen	McLean	Smith
Bayard	George	McNary	Smoot
Borah	Hale	Moses	Spencer
Brandegee	Harreld	Nelson	Sterling
Brookhart	Harris	New	Sutherland
Broussard	Harrison	Nicholson	Townsend
Calder	Heflin	Norbeck	Trammell
Capper	Johnson	Norris	Underwood
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Couzens	Kellogg	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Culberson	Kendrick	Pepper	Warren
Cummins	Keyes	Pittman	Watson
Curtis	Ladd	Pomerene	Weller
Dial	La Follette	Ransdell	Willis
Ernst	Lenroot	Robinson
Fernald	Lodge	Sheppard
Fletcher	McKellar	Shortridge

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

The Secretary will proceed with the call of the calendar.

The resolution (S. Res. 67) authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to hold hearings here or elsewhere and to employ a stenographer to report the same was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that resolution go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the resolution will go over.

SALARY AND MILEAGE OF HON. CHARLES A. RAWSON.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report without amendment Senate Resolution 375, and ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 375) submitted by Mr. CUMMINS on the 6th instant, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Hon. Charles A. Rawson $493.15, salary from November 8, 1922, to December 1, 1922, both dates inclusive, and $450.20, mileage for attendance at the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, said sums being due him as a Senator from the State of Iowa.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not intend to resist the passage of this resolution; in fact, I am very anxious to see former Senator Rawson get his pay, but I am unwilling to let the resolution pass without saying a word. On yesterday I intimated my position on the question involved when the subject came up in reference to another matter. I did not agree with the ruling of the Vice President in the case of former Senator Christie Benet, and I do not agree with it now. It seems to me that the correct rule in reference to these matters is absolutely clear. A man is either a Senator or he is not a Senator. If he is a Senator, then the general law applies. No one, I think, can controvert that proposition. If the general law applies, there is no occasion whatever for providing for the payment of the salary of the Senator out of the contingent fund. If a man is not a Senator, then he is not entitled to be paid out of any fund. I think in such cases these men are Senators.

I did not agree with the Vice President in his ruling in the Benet case for this reason: In the beginning the Constitution of the United States contemplated that the Senate of the United States should hold the balance of power between the States of the Union, be they great or small; that, regardless of population, there should be two Senators on the floor of the Senate in order to protect the rights of the small States as well as the rights of the large ones.

In the beginning the Constitution of the United States provided that Senators should be elected by the legislatures of the States. The Constitution, however, has always provided that a vacancy in the Senate could be filled by appointment.

What was the reason for that? It was that the balance of power in the Senate should not be disturbed for a moment. When the amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators by the people was under consideration here the first proposal did not carry provision for an appointment ad interim by the governor; but Congress in submitting the amendment and the people in ratifying it realized that the balance of power should continue to be held between the States and therefore gave to the governors of the States the right to appoint Senators in the event that the States desired to avail themselves of such right by proper legislation; and all the States of the Union have done so.

Mr. President, it seems to me an absurd proposition to hold that the governor of a State may fill a vacancy existing in the Senate up to election, and that then after election day there must be a vacancy until a certificate of the election of a Senator is filed. It is easy to contemplate a case where an election contest may become so involved that no one can get a certificate of his election as Senator for months after the election; and that during that time such State will have only one representative on the floor of the Senate. If the Senate is going to conform to the ruling heretofore made, I think it will be an absurd proposition. It will not be in accord with the intention of the Constitution as originally framed; it will not be in accord with the intention of the Constitution when the new amendment providing for the election of Senators by the people was adopted. It will force a vacancy in the Senate which was not contemplated at any time by the founders or the framers of this Government.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield in just a second. I have just about concluded. I therefore think that for the future the question should either be decided by the Chair that the salary of Senators who are appointed ad interim shall come out of the Treasury in the usual form or that a resolution should be offered and sent to the Judiciary Committee and this question settled and settled properly.

I now yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to suggest to the Senator that this question arises on account of the act of 1894. I have sent for a copy of that act, but I have not a copy of it before me at this time and have not had opportunity to look at it.

Mr. SMOOT. I have a copy of that act here.

Mr. CURTIS. That law provides that the salary of a Senator who was elected shall begin on the day of his election. I have offered a joint resolution to correct that, and it has gone to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I have asked the committee to act on it as soon as possible. If they will report the joint resolution out, and action is taken on it by Congress, it will remedy the situation to which the Senator from Alabama calls attention.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am very sure it will remedy the situation, so far as paying two salaries is concerned. Two salaries, however, are paid every time there is a contest in the Senate. A Senator who may be unseated draws his salary up to the hour he is unseated, and the Senator who is seated draws his salary back to the beginning of the term. The situation to which the Senator refers, of course, is one that ought to be corrected, but it has nothing to do with the matter which I am arguing. I am discussing a constitutional question, the question of the right of a Senator to take his seat. If he does take his seat, he is a Senator under the law, and he is entitled to draw his pay.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to suggest that it has been the practice of the Senate for many years to permit a Senator who has been appointed or elected to fill a vacancy to serve until his successor appears; and my opinion has been that if we should repeal the statute in reference to salary the evil would be corrected; that then the Senate would continue to permit a Senator to serve, and he would have a right to serve until his successor appeared here with the proper credentials.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that is right. I am making no question about the pending resolution; I am going to allow the resolution to go through in a moment without any objection on my part; but I simply do not want to let the precedent continue so that every time a man presents his credentials here there is a doubt as to how long he remains a Senator. What the Senator from Kansas has just stated is and ought to be the constitutional law of the land. If a man comes here with proper credentials from the governor of his State he is entitled to voice the sentiments of the people of his State until his successor presents his credentials at the Vice President's desk. There should not be any question about that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in order to correct a slight error which I made yesterday in discussing this same question, I wish to read into the RECORD a provision of the law of 1894, as follows:

> That the salaries of Senators elected or appointed to fill vacancies in the Senate, and of Senators elected for a full term subsequent to the commencement of such term, shall commence on the date of their election or appointment.

That is found in the Twenty-eighth Statute at Large, page 162. In this case that means that if we pay Mr. Rawson from November 8, 1922, to December 1, the day on which the elected Senator was sworn in, there will be the payment of two Senators during that length of time. There is no question about that, but it has been the unbroken practice for 28 years to do that.

I agree with the Senator from Alabama that the law should be changed; I think there can be no question as to that; and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] has already stated that he has introduced a joint resolution to bring about that change, but I myself do not think that we ought now to change the precedent which has been followed for 28 years.

I merely wanted the words of the law to go into the RECORD at this time, because, as I have said, I made a statement yesterday, not knowing the law was in force, which conflicts with the law. I desire to be perfectly correct in any statement I ever make in the Senate, and it is for that reason that I take the floor now to make the correction.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. Does he say that under the present rules two Senators draw salaries for the same office?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. For instance, Mr. BROOKHART was elected on November 8, 1922. Under the laws of Iowa the governor of that State could not issue the certificate of election until 20 days afterwards, as I remember, or a certain number of days afterwards; but during that whole time Mr. Rawson was serving in this Chamber, and the resolution is to pay him from November 8, 1922, until the certificate of election of Mr. BROOKHART was presented and he was sworn into the Senate. Therefore during that time, if we pass this resolution, the Senator who was appointed will draw a salary as well as the Senator who was elected on November 8, 1922, up until December 1.

Mr. SMITH. In other words, Mr. BROOKHART's salary begins with the date of his election?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. And Mr. Rawson's salary runs until Mr. BROOKHART is sworn in?

Mr. SMOOT. Until he was sworn in.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then both Senators drew salaries for that period?

Mr. SMOOT. For that period of time.

Mr. HEFLIN. That ought not to be, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought so, Mr. President. I spoke of it yesterday, and said it ought to be changed; but that is the law. It was passed in 1894 and is found in Twenty-eighth Statutes at Large, page 162.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, it applies also to the case of Mrs. Felton and Mr. GEORGE.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, in my own case I was elected on November 2, 1920, and I drew the salary from that day. The term of Governor Comer, who was appointed to succeed Senator Bankhead, expired on the 2d day of November. My term commenced then. I drew the salary. Governor Comer never drew any salary after the 2d of November. It ought to be made clear that the sitting Member's term, the term for which he was appointed, expires on the day of the election. I think that is what we all meant when we amended the Constitution.

Mr. SMITH. Let me ask the Senator from Alabama whether Mr. Comer served on after the 2d day of November?

Mr. HEFLIN. He did not. The Senate was not in session.

Mr. SMITH. But in this case Mr. Rawson served on until Mr. BROOKHART was sworn in, although under the law Mr. BROOKHART's salary started the day he was elected.

Mr. HEFLIN. Why, then, should Mr. Rawson have served a day after Mr. BROOKHART was elected?

Mr. SMOOT. They did not know what day Mr. BROOKHART was elected, and the certificate of election could not be issued until a certain number of days after the election.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the whole difficulty seems to grow out of the statute. The statute directs that the pay of a Senator shall begin at the time of his appointment, if he is appointed, or at the time of his election, if he is elected. Each of those Senators must draw his pay from that time. The financial clerk has nothing else to do but to follow the law. It is the statute that does that. You may pay three people, but you are never without two Senators from each State. The difficulty is under the statute we are probably paying three persons part of the time; but the law is there. There is nothing to do but to change the statute.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. We are unable to hear the Senator, although he is speaking in a very loud voice. There is too much commotion in the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT rapped for order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am simply saying, Mr. President, that there is no option on the part of the disbursing officer of the Senate. Under the statute he must pay from the time the Senator is appointed in the case of an appointment, and under the statute he must pay from the date of the election in the case of an election. He is obliged to make those payments, because the statute says so. The whole thing can be remedied by changing the statute, but until you change the statute there is nothing to do but to pay each Senator as long as he is here, whether he is appointed or whether he is elected, from the date of the appointment or from the date of the election.

There may be a case where three persons are paid, as in the Georgia case. There may be in this case. Part of the time three persons are paid, but that is a matter for the Senate to control. At any rate, it is not a question of the Constitution, I take it, but it is entirely a question of the statute, and the proposal of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] ought to correct that. It seems to me the bill ought to be reported out, and if it is reported out the statute would be changed and the whole question would be settled.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Florida that the bill which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections was referred to a subcommittee, who have met and reported back favorably the bill, which provides that the pay of an appointed Senator shall continue until his successor is elected and qualified; and the pay of the successor commences not from the day of his election, under this bill, but commences from the day of his qualification in the Senate.

May I also say that I find in looking up that case that the precedent has not been quite as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] thinks. The unbroken precedent of the Senate has been never to pay three men. The only time three men are paid is when, as in the present resolution, there is taken out of the contingent fund of the Senate an amount of money to pay the appointed Senator for the time that he has actually been here.

As a matter of fact, this has been the precedent of the Senate: When a Senator is appointed his salary commences from the day of his appointment. When the election occurs his salary automatically ends, even though he continues on, as in the case of the Senator from Iowa or as in the case of the Senator from Georgia. His salary automatically ends on the day of election, and the salary of the man who was elected, even though he does not come in and qualify for a week or two, commences, under the present practice, on the day of his election.

I was an illustration of that very principle. I was elected on November 8, perhaps, 1918. I did not take my seat until the 21st of November, but my salary dated back from the 1st of November, and the salary of the appointee whose place I took, Mr. Wilfley, ended upon the day of the election. That has been the unbroken precedent of the Senate, and if the Senator will read the third paragraph of the memorandum he has he will find precisely what I have said.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator misunderstood me if he thought I said anything else than he has stated. This memorandum says:

> In three or four instances during said time the appointee has been paid for a few days for his attendance after election, and such payments have been made, by authority of the Senate, out of the contingent fund.

Nobody has ever claimed that appointees have been paid in any other way than from the contingent fund. They have never been paid out of the regular appropriation that was made for the 96 Senators. I do not think anybody has claimed that.

Mr. SPENCER. Nor have they ever been paid except by a special resolution taking the amount out of the contingent fund.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, certainly. That is exactly what I stated.

Mr. SPENCER. I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. And that is exactly what this is. This is a resolution to pay the salary out of the contingent fund.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The controversy is not over the proposition of what has been done but over what ought to be done.

Mr. SMOOT. What ought to be done; yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am glad to hear that the Senator is prepared to report a bill to change the law, so that the proper procedure will take place in the future.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. HARRELD addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the important question here is not the payment of the salary, although that might have considerable weight. It is a serious proposition, to my mind. It ought to be settled by the Senate when there is no difficulty before it, and no matter that will either be invalidated or otherwise affected.

The question involved is, Who is Senator from a certain State under certain conditions, or is there any Senator? The question is whether, when a Senator is appointed to fill a vacancy, his term expires on the day his successor is elected. If that is true, then there will be, in effect, a vacancy from that State, no matter how many salaries are paid. The question involved is whether that Senator holds by virtue of his appointment until his successor is qualified. Otherwise you would have a hiatus.

It is a matter that goes away beyond the payment of a salary. There might be a time in the Senate when the fate of important legislation would depend upon one vote, when a bill affecting the entire people was being voted on, when the vote of one Senator would change the result. We can easily imagine cases of that kind that would be of transcendent importance. If a person is here voting who is not a Senator, and that vote changes the result, it is something that affects the entire country. It is a question of construction of the constitutional provision. We had better decide it at some time, at least, even though we decide it as many of us would think would be wrong, rather than not have it decided at all.

I am not trying to affect this resolution. I am perfectly willing that it shall go through until the matter is settled; but if a man who is appointed to fill a vacancy is only entitled to his seat until election day, he is not entitled to vote after that time and between that date and the date when his successor is qualified and sworn in here.

That is the important thing. That may have a great bearing upon the entire country. It seems to me the matter ought to be deliberately passed on by the Senate. Let it be referred first, perhaps, to the proper committee, to the Judiciary Committee, and have a report come in, and then let there be a vote on the question, so as to establish a precedent one way or the other. It is not a matter of statute, but it is a matter of construction of a constitutional provision.

The Senate, it is true, is the judge of the qualifications of its Members, and so forth, and its decision is final. It ought to pass on this matter, not in a haphazard way but after due deliberation, because if that is not done the time may come when this question may upset important legislation in which the entire country is interested.

THE MUSCLE SHOALS PLANT.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the passage of the pending resolution, but I want to say a word while it is before the Senate about another matter.

In the Washington Post of to-day there is an article regarding a bill introduced in the House yesterday by Mr. DICKINSON, of Iowa. It is headed:

> Federal production of fertiliser urged. Farm bloc Member offers bill in House for Government operation of Muscle Shoals.

The article reads:

> A Government-controlled corporation to produce nitrate for war purposes and cheap fertiliser for farmers was proposed yesterday as a solution of the Muscle Shoals question by Representative DICKINSON, Republican, Iowa, a leader of the "farm bloc," who introduced a bill to put his plan into effect.
> In a statement Mr. DICKINSON said the Ford offer for Muscle Shoals had been subjected to such "strong criticism" as to endanger the future disposition of the plant, and that he had been "led to the conclusion that some plan of Federal operation is the only solution that will insure early completion" of the work. His bill provides that the "Federal Chemical Corporation," consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of Agriculture, and three members to be appointed by the President, be given power to complete and operate the Muscle Shoals project for the manufacture of nitrate and fertilizer, the latter to be sold to the consumer at cost plus 4½ per cent to provide funds to complete and equip the plants. The corporation also would be authorized to sell excess power to States, municipalities, or private enterprise. The corporation also would be authorized to fix prices for fertilizer charged by private manufacturers who obtained the chemical elements from the Muscle Shoals plant.

Mr. President, in one breath we are urged to keep the Government out of business, to keep the hand of the Federal Government out of private enterprise, and to do that which will encourage enterprise and industry among the citizens. Here is a suggestion to put the Government into the business of manufacturing fertilizer. That should only be done as a matter of last resort.

I know, and I think every other Senator here knows, that the fertilizer concerns of this country are so big and powerful that they are not going to permit those who now control the Government to manufacture fertilizer to be sold in competition with their products. At this time the mere suggestion of that course would seem to mean another effort to postpone favorable action on the Ford offer for Muscle Shoals.

Mr. President, when a Republican committee from the House had recommended that the Muscle Shoals project be abandoned, that the Government should not expend any more money on the project, I suggested that the Senate Committee on Agriculture visit Muscle Shoals and see for ourselves just what the situation was. The Senate by resolution, which was recommended by our committee, authorized us to go. We were accompanied by a House committee, and the members of both committees said that the project should be completed as early as possible, that it was a wonderful project, and the thought of junking it was ridiculous.

Henry Ford, the marvel and wizard of the industrial world, went down there with Thomas A. Edison, and when he looked at that power site and saw that mighty water power going to waste, the Government property standing idle and deteriorating, he said, "I will take charge of this project if the Government will permit me, and use it for the good of millions of people." He said, "I will rescue it from the category of junk material and make it bless and benefit millions of American farmers."

We came back to Congress and started hearings on the subject in the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate, and Mr. Ford's chief engineer, Mr. Mayo, stated in response to a question from me that it was Mr. Ford's purpose to manufacture commercial fertilizer in abundance, and that he would be able to sell that fertilizer to the farmers of the United States for half the price they pay for it now.

Mr. President, that would be a wonderful help and blessing to our farmers. The fertilizer bill in my State alone in 1920 was $20,000,000. If the purchasers of fertilizer in Alabama could have bought that fertilizer for half that amount, $10,000,000, it would have saved to the farmers of my State on fertilizer in one year $10,000,000. It can be seen from that situation that it would be worth millions to the States that use fertilizer. The day is not far distant when the farmers will have to have fertilizer for their farming land in the West, and here is an opportunity to use the water power on the Tennessee River and make use of the phosphate beds in Tennessee and manufacture cheap fertilizer for our farmers.

Mr. President, this matter has been pending in the Senate and in the House for months. The farmers of the South and West and East and North favor the Ford offer. The laboring men of the whole country are for Henry Ford; and why is it that we can not get this matter up in this body and in the House and pass it?

Now, a suggestion is made in the House that is impossible and impracticable. At this time no majority will vote for a measure of this sort. I do not want to put the Government into competition with private enterprise if I can help it. I want to encourage private individuals to go into every kind of legitimate business. Here is an opportunity to give to the farmers of the United States fertilizer at half price.

Let us accept Ford's offer at this session of Congress. I submit that when certain Senators are moving heaven and earth to pass a ship subsidy bill, which is in the interest, in the main, of the Shipping Trust of the United States, they ought to give some consideration to the demand of the farming mass of the American people and the laboring people of the United States who favor accepting the Ford offer for Muscle Shoals.

Why is it that we can not get action upon a matter of this kind? Is it because certain sinister interests have said we shall not have action upon it at this session?

Mr. President, they are merely postponing the day. If we can not get action in this session of Congress, we will get it after the 4th of March. We are going to have a new order of things after the 4th of March. I believe we will have a majority in this body that will support Henry Ford's offer. I believe we will have a majority in the House that will support the Ford offer after the 4th of March, and I am not sure that a majority in the House would not vote for it now, and I am not entirely sure that we could not obtain a majority in the Senate if you would permit us to vote upon it. I ask the question of the Senate and the country, Why is it that these measures, in which the people generally are interested, are sidestepped and sidetracked, when measures in which special interests are concerned come to the front and are pressed and passed by the party in power?

It is proposed that a Federal chemical corporation shall go out into the business of manufacturing fertilizer and sell electric power to villages and towns. The very moment this thing was started all those interests would come in and say, "You do not want the Government to go into that sort of business," and the development of Muscle Shoals would be postponed for a couple of years more, and maybe longer.

Government management and operation was tried at Muscle Shoals. The project lay there neglected, and your party authority recommended that it be abandoned. A committee of the House went so far as to report that it should be junked. I never have been able to understand just why that committee made such a report. There is not a single scintilla of creditable testimony that would warrant such a report. It has been suggested that that report was made in the interest of the Alabama Power Co.; that the Alabama Power Co. wanted the Government to think it was a worthless project, and had the idea that they could buy it and get control of it for a song after a year or two. We do not intend that it shall be disposed of in that way. Here is a man who has vision and means for completing the great work mapped out in his mind. He will make that section of the country to blossom as the rose. Why should we not permit him to carry out his plan?

It ought to be the desire of this administration and of every other administration to build up, and not to tear down. It ought to be its purpose to give people employment, instead of doing that which will keep them out of employment. What would Henry Ford do if given this project? He would go down there and use that water power to operate those nitrate plants and make fertilizer in time of peace, and sell that fertilizer to the farmers of America at half the price they are paying to-day. What a blessing that would be in the form of millions of dollars saved every year to them.

What else would he do? He would give employment to thousands of men and women.

He would build up an industrial city in the Tennessee Valley at Muscle Shoals.

What else? The completion of that project would make the river navigable for miles and harness and use to splendid purpose this water power, which is now going to waste.

What else would be accomplished? We would save millions of tons of coal each year by the use of this water power for the making of fertilizer. There are so many blessings and benefits to come from this project completed and in the hands of this man Ford, who would literally make things hum at Muscle Shoals.

Mr. President, I just want the Senate and the country to know that in my judgment any movement now to prevent Henry Ford from getting Muscle Shoals is a block in the way of the development of that great and potential project. If these interests are strong enough to keep action from being had here in favor of Ford operating this project, what would they do if Ford should be eliminated, against the Government going into business in competition with them? Everybody knows what would happen.

Nobody is going to be deceived about this thing. The truth of it must be and it shall be known to the country. Mr. President, I had thought that some lessons would be learned from the recent election. The friends of Henry Ford in this development of Muscle Shoals condemned every man who voted against this project in the House before the election, and who stood in the way of its passage, and a good many of them were defeated. Their stand on this matter contributed to their defeat.

So, Mr. President, I want to say again in conclusion: Here is an opportunity to harness and utilize to the great advantage of the people the waters of the mighty Tennessee. The dam is now going on to completion, and here is a man who offers to take it over, lease it for a period of 100 years, pay for its upkeep, and at the end of that time he will have paid back to the Government more money than the whole thing cost at the outset.

What will he have done during that time? He will have operated this plant, furnishing fertilizer to the farmer in time of peace and nitrates to the Government in time of war. The Government can take these plants over at any time it needs to operate them to make nitrates. That is a wonderful thing in itself. In peace time they would manufacture fertilizer, which will increase the productivity of the soil, which will help to supply in abundance food and clothing to people here and in lands beyond the sea.

It will conserve the coal supply and give employment to people who are now idle.

Mr. President, it seems to me this project is worthy of the earliest consideration of the Senate, and that we ought to pass favorably on this proposition and permit Henry Ford to have Muscle Shoals. Such action would bless and benefit more people than any other disposition that can be made of Muscle Shoals.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution passed by the American Legion at their New Orleans meeting with regard to the disposal of the Muscle Shoals plant and stating what they believe are the principles that should be the guide in its disposal and utilization for the benefit of all the people. I also ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution passed by American Legion in national convention assembled at New Orleans, La., October 20, 1922, on reclamation and national defense.

Whereas at the beginning of the World War the United States Government was brought to a realization of the fact that it was wholly dependent upon the Chilean nitrate beds and German war-built nitrogen plants for its supply of nitrogen, which is absolutely necessary for the manufacture of high explosives; and

Whereas the said United States Government did thereupon appropriate large sums of money for the erection and operation of nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2 at Muscle Shoals for the manufacture of nitrogen in large quantities by extracting same from the air, which said plants were completed and successfully operated just prior to the armistice, or just after, and are the only air-nitrogen plants in the United States of America; and

Whereas the above-mentioned plants have not only been left inoperative since the war, but have constantly fallen into a state of deterioration, at an expense of many thousands of dollars annually to the taxpayers of this country, while similar air-nitrogen plants in Germany were speedily converted so as to manufacture cheaply nitrogen fertilizers for the enrichment and reclamation of the arid farm lands of Germany, which has proven to be an untold blessing to the people of that country; and

Whereas we believe that the continuance of our dependence upon foreign countries for the necessary supply of nitrogen for fertilizers in time of peace and for explosives in time of war is not only an unspeakable humiliation but is positively perilous from the point of view of the national defense: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (1), That we, the American Legion, in national convention assembled, do hereby call upon the Congress of the United States, upon the assembling of same, immediately to take up and act upon the measures pending in Congress or that may be introduced immediately upon the reconvening of same on the subject, and to determine upon a definite fixed policy as to the disposition of same; and

(2) In determining upon the disposition to be made of said properties they be governed by the following principles, which we believe to be fundamental, namely:

(a) No policy or plan should be accepted which does not provide for the operation of said plants in time of peace and the manufacture of fertilizer, and the test for acceptance of any offer should be the amount of fertilizer proposed to be manufactured;

(b) No plan or policy should be adopted which is calculated to introduce Federal operation of the project;

(c) The fertilizer production at Muscle Shoals shall have preferred supply of power in time of peace;

(d) No plan or policy should be adopted which does not assure the Government that a research or experimental department will be maintained and conducted in connection with the plants for the purpose of keeping up with the most approved methods of nitrogen production, and that in the event of military emergency the said plants will be made available to the Government at the call of the Secretary of War for the manufacture of nitrogen for explosives.

(3) That the national legislative committee of the American Legion be directed to use all possible legitimate efforts to the end that the Congress of the United States immediately enact such legislation as aforesaid.

This is to certify that the above resolution on reclamation and national defense was passed by the American Legion in national convention assembled at New Orleans, La., on Friday, October 20, 1922, and is a matter of official record.

[SEAL.] LEMUEL BOLLES,
National Adjutant American Legion.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama has repeated a statement in regard to fertilizer which he has so often before repeated that it may be almost useless to deny it now. He said several times during his remarks that turning the Muscle Shoals property over to Henry Ford was to put fertilizer in the hands of the farmer at half the cost. There is no such proposition. There is no such promise. I defy the Senator or anybody to put his finger on any provision of the Ford offer that guarantees anything of the kind.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator knows that I made no such statement. I said that Mr. Mayo said they would be able to sell fertilizer to the farmer at half the price the farmer was paying for it now.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Mayo did not say that, even.

Mr. HEFLIN. He said it in hearings in the committee room.

Mr. NORRIS. No, Mr. President. The Senator has left the impression——

Mr. HEFLIN. I assert that he did say it.

Mr. NORRIS. I will take the record for it if the Senator will let it stand that way.

Mr. HEFLIN. I assert that he used practically that language in the hearing, that they intended to sell it to the farmer at about half the price he has to pay for it now.

Mr. NORRIS. No; there is no such guaranty by anybody. If there is such a guaranty, then it must come in Henry Ford's offer. He is not bound by anything but that, and there is no such guaranty that by any construction of the human language can be construed to mean it. I am not complaining because there is not such a guaranty. Of course, Mr. Ford would not make that kind of guaranty, because he does not know, and no other living man knows now, whether they are going to be able to do that or not. I have not any doubt that fertilizer is going to be reduced in price.

If it had not been for the Ford adherents on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry we would now have on the calendar of the Senate a bill which would have provided for the greatest investigation and greatest development of the fertilizer proposition that has ever been known in the history of the world. But because of the opposition of the Senator from Alabama and the other Ford adherents, they refused even to consider the bill, and they had enough votes to prevent the committee from taking it up. The bill which the Ford adherents, by combining with those who are opposed to any development, succeeded in temporarily killing would have provided for a fertilizer investigation and development that would have made everything connected with Mr. Ford's proposition "look like 30 cents." As I said before, there never was such a tremendous proposition for the expenditure of money and time and scientific research, for the development of fertilizer for the benefit of the American farmer and the farmers of the world, than was contained in that bill which the Ford people have been fighting.

More than that, they speak of the work that is going on down at Muscle Shoals. It is a historic fact that the Ford people were sufficiently strong in this body and in the House to absolutely prevent the development of that great work down there from the 1st of July until the 1st day of October of this year.

The Senator said that the committee which went down there was impressed with the fact that it ought to be developed, and that is true. There was no dissension, so far as I know, on that proposition. Probably there would have been a difference of opinion if the Government had not already invested considerably over $100,000,000 in its development. There is nothing to hinder Henry Ford from going to any of a dozen places on the Tennessee River or any other river and commencing the development of water power under the general law as it now stands. But he does not want that. He wants to take what the Government has partially developed, where the taxpayers have spent about $125,000,000, and start there with practically a gift from the taxpayers of the United States, and then to get a lease for 100 years, such as has never been granted and can not be granted under the general law to any man or any corporation.

At whose expense is that to be done? The Senator said Ford would build up a city down there. I have no doubt of that, but who is going to pay for that great development? The taxpayers of the United States, not Henry Ford. He is going to develop a great water power down there, true enough. It is partially developed now. But who is going to pay for it under Ford's proposition? The taxpayers of America would pay for it. Ford is going to have a lease for 100 years. He will finish the dam. But who will pay for it? The taxpayers.

The Senator said that Ford is going to contribute a sum of money which, at the end of 100 years, will repay what the Government has put into it. If one would place $100 out at 4 per cent interest and somebody would compound that every six months and add it to the $100 and keep it up for 100 years he would have an amount of money that would scare him to death if he could live that long to see it. The evidence shows and the computations made by experts show that giving this corporation which Henry Ford proposes to organize credit for every dollar that it pays on the day that it pays it, it would amount to giving him money for 2.85 per cent out of the Federal Treasury for 100 years' time. If the taxpayers of the United States want to do that, then I do not understand them. I do not believe they want to do it.

How old is Henry Ford? Does anybody know? He is 60 or perhaps a little more. He is going to organize a corporation with a capital stock of $10,000,000. It is that corporation and not Henry Ford with which the Government deals. He binds himself, his heirs and executors, to what he has agreed to do in the contract, and that is to organize that corporation. When he organizes it with a capital of $10,000,000 he has complied with his proposition. He is not liable any further. Giving him credit for all of the good qualities that are claimed for him by anybody, I have never yet heard anyone claim that he is such a superhuman being that God is going to let him live 100 years to control his corporation.

When the farmers of America understand the iniquity of this Ford proposition they will rise en masse and condemn it, and they will condemn any man who stands for it. Ford's proposition to develop this waterway, to finish the dam at public expense, on which the Government is working now, gives to him, outside of the water power necessary to operate nitrate plant No. 2, absolute fee to all property there in the shape of power that he would develop. By the payment of $5,000,000 he is to be given fee title to all property down there, to two towns paid for by the taxpayers of America, property that cost us more than $100,000,000, with macadamized streets, electric lights, waterworks, sewage disposal, and modern houses—two towns in absolute fee simple—and then he is to be given another town with a lot of land connected with it for 100 years without the payment of a cent, without the payment of a dollar. That power will belong to the corporation.

I have no doubt they will build up a city there, but there is no guaranty that even that city which springs up right there will be able to get one kilowatt of electric power from the water that is running downhill in plain sight and plain hearing of the town itself. It will belong to the corporation. There is no secret about it that it is going to be utilized by the corporation for its own benefit in manufacturing purposes. That great power is there if developed properly, but the bill which the Ford adherents helped to kill temporarily was a bill which provided that the power should be developed; that storage reservoirs should be built clear to the source of the Tennessee River and its tributaries, making the most complete development of water power on a stream ever undertaken by anybody or any government anywhere in the world. The secondary power would have been converted into primary power. It would have made the stream navigable. It would have controlled to a great extent the flood waters of the Mississippi River farther down. All that was involved in the bill which the Ford people are fighting. All that, Mr. President, was involved in the bill which would have given navigation, flood control, development of power, to all of the people instead of giving the two dams, which are only a partial development, to one corporation without any regulation by either State or national authority. There is a difference between the two propositions.

Mr. President, I can not understand how anyone who wants to help the navigability of the Tennessee River, how anyone who is interested lower down in the control of the flood waters of the Mississippi River, how anyone who wants to develop the power of our navigable streams, can fight a proposition of that kind. The power development then, instead of being given to one corporation with one city located at Muscle Shoals, would be distributed over a dozen different States of the Union. South Carolina would get some of it, as would Mississippi and Alabama. New Orleans would be supplied with power from that source. It would be the most wonderful supply depot of electric power anywhere on earth. On the other hand, it is said that Ford will complete the two dams. His corporation has not even made a proposition that they will ever build a dam for flood control, that they will ever build another dam anywhere to help make the flow of the stream the same at all times of the year. They have no such broad comprehensive scheme. They are to construct the two dams at Muscle Shoals but we are to pay for the construction.

I repeat, if we shall give Mr. Ford credit for every dollar that he pays it will return to the taxpayers of America less than 3 per cent on the money which has been expended and is to be expended from the Federal Treasury. There is the difference between the two propositions. If the bill is defeated, if that wonderful development of the Tennessee River is prevented, it is going to be because the Ford adherents in the Senate and in the other House are determined to defeat it.

I have never said that Ford would not be able to cheapen fertilizer. With 2½ per cent money, in 100 years he ought to be able to do so; when we are turning over to him $125,000,000 worth of property for $5,000,000, he ought to be able to do it.

What are we going to turn over to him? One nitrate plant, as complete as any in the world, which cost between eighty million and ninety million dollars—indeed, I think a little over $90,000,000—stands down there now complete. We constructed it as a war measure. If we ever become involved in another war we should require it, or we should require something like it somewhere else. Even that would not be enough to supply our Army. Now, when the war clouds have passed away, why shall we turn over this plant for a song to a corporation? The Senator says that in case of war we should get it back. That is true enough; but we should not get it back for $5,000,000, the price it is proposed that he shall pay for it. If the proposition even contained a provision that in case the Government desired to take it back it could take it back at what the Government let him have it for, it would be very different; but in such a case we shall not only have to pay the corporation the full value of the plant but we shall have to pay them damages for interfering with their business, if we ever do take it back.

Mr. President, I should not have been advocating in this Congress the wonderful development which I have advocated in the Tennessee River if it had not been for the fact that the Government has already expended so much money on it. We made that expenditure as a war measure, as we would in the construction of a battleship, but in this case the plant has a peacetime usefulness as well as a war-time usefulness. It is better in that respect than a battleship, because during peace times we can use it for the purpose of manufacturing fertilizer, or at least we think there is a fair chance of being able so to operate it that fertilizer may be more economically produced. Not a single scientific man, however, has staked his reputation on the proposition that we shall be able thereby to cut the price of producing fertilizer in two; it is still a question of experiment to a great extent.

Now, let me tell Senators of another thing which is down there. Nitrate Plant No. 1 cost the Government six million or seven million dollars; it was erected for the purpose of getting nitrate out of the air by what is known as the Haber process. That was a failure, but the building is there, the engines are there, the machinery is there. Much of that machinery will have to be scrapped; but the plant affords the greatest opportunity and the greatest opening, scientific men will agree with me, which is presented to mankind anywhere in the world for experimentation and development of the process of getting nitrate from the air by what is known as the Haber process. If the bill which the Ford people have succeeded in blocking had been passed, under it the Government would have taken that plant which it now owns, taken the old machinery out of it, and put into it machinery which it is now known will enable nitrates to be obtained from the air by the Haber process. It would have afforded one of the greatest experimental propositions that has ever been known to man. It may be a failure; we can not promise that it will be a success; but an adequate supply of fertilizer is one of the most important questions now before the American people or, for that matter, before the civilized world; and it is going to be more important year after year. There are millions and millions of tons of fertilizer in the air which we breathe, and the question is, will human ingenuity be such that we shall be able to get it out of the air at a reasonable price? We must spend money in order to ascertain that. Nobody now knows for a certainty whether the experiment will be a success. We know, however, that we can obtain it; we know that we can get nitrates from the air in large quantities; and in case of war we should not care so much for the cost. We know also that at the present time the cost would not be so reduced that the present price of fertilizer would be greatly lowered, but we hope to lessen the cost of its production. Whoever does the work expects to improve the process; and I have sufficient faith in the ingenuity of the human mind, in the American scientific men who I believe are going to do the work, to be sanguine of its success. It is a work of vast magnitude; something in which all the people regardless of where they may live or what their station in life may be are interested; for the time is fast approaching when we must have fertilizer or the necessary production of food in order to enable human beings to live will be seriously crippled.

I believe we are going to meet the difficulty by the proper investigation and experimentation; but I would not be so reckless as to say to the Senate and to the American people that even if the bill to which I have been referring be passed we shall be able to accomplish that object; that is a matter which is yet in the unknown future; but if there is such a thing as getting the benefit from having made the development it will not come from the Ford proposition but from the passage of the other bill. That bill will do a thousand times more in the way of investigation than Ford's proposition contemplates.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HARRELD. I should like to ask, Is it not a fact that Mr. Ford's proposition limits the quantity of fertilizer that he will make to the capacity of plant No. 2?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that is all. He could make more if he wanted to, but he has not guaranteed to make any more.

Mr. HARRELD. Does not this proposition limit his obligation to that amount?

Mr. NORRIS. His obligation is limited to that quantity.

Mr. HARRELD. He would not have to use any of the power that is generated by either of these dams to make fertilizer in excess of the capacity of plant No. 2?

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. President, if we are fair, I think we can all agree with each other that we are anxious to promote the production of fertilizer. The bill of which I have spoken puts fertilizer, navigation, flood control, and hydroelectric power all together; they are interlocked; they help each other. The dam that holds back the flood waters and prevents damage in the Mississippi also equalizes the flow over all the dams that are below that dam and converts secondary power into primary power. When that can be done it is a wonderful thing. Not only does it do that, however, but the same dams, with a little extra expense, will have locks in them which will provide for the navigation of the stream. The two dams that are proposed to be built by Ford will extend navigation to some extent, but, compared with the other scheme, the result attained will be but a drop in the bucket.

Mr. President, I had not expected to speak on this subject; I did not know that the Senator from Alabama was going to repeat what, in my judgment, are statements that are not borne out by the Ford proposal; I do not care to take the question up now; but I could not remain silent and permit these statements to go without a reply. It seems to me, Mr. President, if the great South wants to develop her resources, as I want to see them developed, she ought to lend her assistance to a proposition that will develop the entire Tennessee River to its maximum for power, for navigation, and for flood control, and that the power so developed should not be turned over to one corporation without any regulation, but it ought to be distributed over as wide an expanse of country as possible.

I have often heard from one of the advocates who is supposed to represent one of the farm organizations of the country the statement made that if the Government will turn the Muscle Shoals project over to Ford and pay him for building the dam it will help the washerwoman, that she will get cheap power to run her washing machine. Absolutely the reverse is true; there is no chance for the poor anywhere to get the benefit; but the power will go to enrich a corporation. There will not be a kilowatt unless that corporation consents to it that will ever light a street lamp, that will ever turn an electric washing machine, that will ever turn an electric wringer, that will ever toast a piece of bread, that will ever do anything for the benefit of anybody except that corporation. It will turn their wheels; will do everything that will bring in money to them; and it will be absolutely unregulated. Nowhere, from any source whatever, if that contract is agreed to by the Congress of the United States, will there be any regulations upon the corporation.

So, in the first place, the public will not get any of the power, but it will all go to one corporation and to one locality. There will be a city there, I think, and there ought to be. I do not know how large it will be, but it will not be nearly so large as the real estate speculators think it will be. They have already started a town extending some 8 miles in some directions and are offering the lots for sale now. The project when completed should develop to a great extent all that section of the country. If the river is canalized, and the dams constructed, there is not any doubt that it will do so, but, in order to develop it properly and to have from public property the power of navigable streams distributed over just as wide a scope of the country as possible, in order to give everybody, rich and poor alike, the benefit of it, we will have to reject the Ford offer.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I never make on the floor of the Senate a statement which I think is a fact without knowing what I am talking about. I was stating from memory what Mr. Mayo had said. I had asked him a question, and his answer warranted me in saying what I did a moment ago. I asked Mr. Mayo and I am now going to read from the hearings. I said to Mr. Mayo:

> I understand it is the purpose of Mr. Ford to manufacture fertilizers cheaper, so that the farmer will be able to buy fertilizers cheaper than he can buy them now under the trust's control. Is not that the purpose?
> Mr. MAYO. Well, offhand, we think we could make fertilizer at about half the price it is sold for to-day.

That is the statement I made. The Senator from Nebraska said that there was no foundation for a statement of that sort. I am sure that he had forgotten the testimony when he made that statement.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I am sure the Senator has forgotten the testimony. What he has read does not bear out the Senator's statement in any degree. The Senator might have misspoken himself, and probably did, but if he will read the testimony which was taken down by a reporter he will find a much broader statement was made than he has indicated. What he has read does not contradict what I said. That is not Ford's contract; nobody will claim that Ford or any proposed corporation is bound by that testimony. There is nothing of that kind in his proposition.

Mr. HEFLIN. I never once said that it was in the Ford contract. I said that his chief engineer, Mr. Mayo, was explaining to us what they intended to do. There is Mr. Mayo's statement in the printed hearings that they thought they could make fertilizer for half the price it was selling for to-day. That was my statement to the Senate. That is the statement that I stand upon.

Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska is in distress because he fears that the Government is about to give something to Henry Ford. He complains that Ford would be getting the use of the money invested at Muscle Shoals for about 2½ per cent. I want to remind the Senator from Nebraska that the ship subsidy bill that has just passed the House will, if it is enacted into law, permit the Ship Trust to borrow money from the Government for 2 per cent.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there?

Mr. HEFLIN. I shall be glad to have the Senator interrupt me.

Mr. NORRIS. I am opposed to ship subsidy. I suppose, from the way the Senator is backing up Ford to get money at 2½ per cent, that he is in favor of ship subsidy.

Mr. HEFLIN. Not at all; but I am just reminding the Senator——

Mr. NORRIS. Why does the Senator favor a subsidy to Ford's corporation, not to Ford, and oppose it by way of ship subsidy?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am reminding the Senator that gigantic operations are going on before his very eyes and all around him, and I have not heard him open his mouth against this ship-subsidy plan so far. When they are undertaking to squander a merchant fleet that cost the Government $3,000,000,000 and turn it over to the Ship Trust for $200,000,000, it is high time the Senator was using some of his eloquence and brilliancy in combating such a measure as that.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator can not put me in the attitude of supporting ship subsidy, either now or at any other time. He says I have not opened my mouth. I have many times opened my mouth, but my mouth is not so big and so the Senator did not see it.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am talking about the opening of the Senator's mouth on this subject recently.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that from the figures he has just given as to the ships that are going to be turned over in the ship-subsidy proposition, the ship men are paying a larger per cent to the Government of the United States in proportion to what the Government paid than the Ford corporation is paying for the property it gets down at Muscle Shoals.

Mr. HEFLIN. No, Mr. President.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes. Just let the Senator figure it out, and he will find that it works out that way.

Mr. HEFLIN. Not at all. The Senator is absolutely wrong.

Mr. President, the ship subsidy will benefit a few shipowners. The people of the United States are to be taxed to put money into the pockets of the Ship Trust. The Government ships are to be squandered to the Ship Trust, and the Government then is to pay the Ship Trust to operate them. Then the Government is to loan money to the Ship Trust, if it wants it, at 2 per cent. All this is to be done in the interest of the Shipping Trust of the United States; but when we come to the millions of farmers in the West, the great agricultural army of the Nation, the wage earners, amounting to millions, their call in behalf of Henry Ford is to be ignored.

Here is a project down by the Tennessee River, with nitrate plants constructed when the war was at high tide, constructed at considerable cost, it is true. These plants were standing on the riverside idle, and a dam nearing completion was there, and the whole thing was about to be abandoned upon the recommendation of a committee going down from the Republican House of Representatives to inspect a place that the Senator now says is so valuable. Who inspired that report against Muscle Shoals? What sinister interest in Wall Street or elsewhere expected the Government to come away from Muscle Shoals, and, after two or three years' time, say: "Here is a report that says it is junk; we will give you a million dollars for it, or two millions, and take the project off your hands"? Some things about that need to be explained.

Here comes a man, when he reads that report, who says in substance: "From what I can hear of Muscle Shoals, such a course would be an outrage on decency and a travesty on justice. I will go down there and take with me a man in whose judgment the whole people have great confidence"; and he takes the wizard of the electrical world, Thomas A. Edison. They go down and look at it, and marvel at what they see—this water singing the song of wasted strength as it winds its way to the sea because of maltreatment and neglect on the part of the Republican Party. This man Ford says: "I have the money. If they seek to junk this thing, I will not permit it to be done if I can help it. I will give $5,000,000 for these two plants, standing idle, and one of them out of commission. I will take it over, and if the Government will complete this dam"—it ought to; it has gone on until it is nearing completion—"and make this river navigable for miles, I will take it over, and I will build on the banks of this river an industrial city, and I will bring people here that they may earn a livelihood in this great Tennessee Valley, and I will give labor to people who are walking the streets in your industrial cities, half clad and hungry." Senators, is not a purpose so worthy entitled to our enthusiastic support?

These in substance were the purposes that he had in mind. He said: "I will harness that river, and I will make fertilizers, and I will relieve the downtrodden farmers of America from the high prices they now have to pay." I know that the Senator from Nebraska sympathizes with them, but I never saw his judgment so much at fault in my life as it is upon this particular project, where the interest of the farmers is involved. They are being held up now on every hand. Money sufficient to carry on their business is denied them. Credits are exceedingly difficult to obtain. They are forced in many instances to sell their products below the cost of production. They are handicapped and hand tied; and here, on the Ford offer, they are held up by the fertilizer concerns of the country.

Ford promises cheap fertilizer to the farmer in time of peace and nitrates to the Government in time of war, and yet the Senator from Nebraska seems to see no good in the Ford offer!

Mr. President, we are going to fight this thing to a finish. The people are going to know the truth. I know—and we are getting up some of the facts on it now—what big concerns are trying to throttle action upon this measure in this body and in the other body, too. No half-hammered measure, seeking to deceive people, is going to be permitted to deceive or mislead them. This issue has to be fought out in the open, and we are going to have the votes to do it. Why not let us do it now?

I did not attend the progressive conference the other day. I got the impression from some of the newspaper notices that it was in the interest of a third-party movement. I have no sympathy with a third-party movement. I am a Democrat, an enthusiastic, and I believe that the Democratic Party holds in its concept of constitutional government a right solution for all the questions that vex the people of this country.

I believe in its principles, and I believe that the Democratic Party, when properly supported by progressives, can work out these problems to the good of all the people. We have done it; we can do it again; but I want to say to those who do favor progressive legislation that I will support all just and helpful progressive measures. I will do that. It makes no difference who introduces the bill, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican. I am for all measures that seek to deal fairly and enforce the laws of justice.

I probably made the first suggestion on this floor that led to the formation of a farm bloc in the Senate when I said that the Republicans from the West, by joining with the Democrats from the South, could help us to revive the War Finance Corporation. After that suggestion Senator Kenyon came over and discussed the matter with me, and he called the first meeting of our forces, and I said at one or more of those meetings: "There is no politics in this. It is a matter of business. The South is in distress, pillaged and plundered by deflationists. The West is in distress, pillaged and plundered by the same band of plundering marauders. We ought to put our strength together, give deliverance to these people, and revive the War Finance Corporation. We can do it, and we ought to do it." So we cooperated, and we brought about results, and that legislation did a great deal of good to the South and the West. It raised the price of the farmers' cotton 10 cents a pound.

I am in favor of voting in the future for measures that will do things like that, and this Henry Ford measure is one of them. It ought to be the intense desire of every man who is a progressive, who has any of the instincts of the progressive in him, to put his shoulder to the wheel and see that this matter is driven through. Good will come of it, not only to Henry Ford, as the Senator says, but to all the people of the country.

The Senator says nobody will be benefited but Henry Ford. Why, Mr. President, Henry Ford is a very wealthy man now. He is a very rich man. He wants to do good with his wealth. There are, as I said here once before, a few men like that in the world. He is not in politics, and you can not attack his motives. He brought down the price of the Ford car within reach of the common man; and there are thousands of men and women riding in the rural districts of America and in the villages and towns in cheap Ford cars who otherwise never would have known what it was to ride in a vehicle of that kind. The other automobile makers scolded and criticized Henry Ford; they denounced him because he brought the price of automobiles down. They said: "You can sell them for $1,500 or $2,000 and make more money"; but he said, "I want to put them within the reach of the plain people. I want them to enjoy some of the comforts and conveniences of life." So Henry Ford expended his millions to reach this class, pillaged and plundered so long by sinister interests, and thousands of them kept in the ne'er-do-well class. They would not let them have enough money or sufficient credits to carry on business to make that business prosperous. Under Democratic rule we unloosed those instrumentalities, and the people having money with which to do business commenced to get on their feet. They got a little money, and Henry Ford brought down the price of Ford cars so that they could buy them and ride in them. Now he is moved by the same motive to free the farmers from the clutches of the fertilizer concerns of the country.

The Senator from Nebraska went so far as to try to defend the Fertilizer Trust, saying there was no trust, and he said they had a man over there before the committee who was supposed to be the head of it, and that I did not ask him any questions.

Mr. NORRIS. Was not that true? The Senator did not ask him a question. I got him there on purpose so that the Senator could develop the fact if there was a Fertilizer Trust. I did not say there was none; I said, "I do not know." The Senator has said there was so often that I gave him an opportunity to produce the evidence, and he did not do it. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the farmers around the country say there is a Fertilizer Trust. They pass resolutions in the South, and some in the West, denouncing the Fertilizer Trust and the treatment of the farmers by the Fertilizer Trust, and the Senator says now that he wanted me to develop the case against the trust by the testimony of the individual at the head of it. Now, think of that—a trust magnate, the fellow who engineers the thing that sucks the lifeblood of the farmers of the country and makes him millions of dollars—expecting him to tell how it was done and to plead guilty to engaging in crooked conduct.

Mr. President, I remember now the witness he mentioned. He was not on the witness stand long. I knew that he would not tell anything against himself and his trust. And if he had said until he was black in the face that there was no trust I would not have believed him. The farmers say there is a trust. Why is it that fertilizers are kept up at sky-high prices? Why is it the farmers are bound up in these mortgages and waive notes, so that there is no escape from the pains and penalties of these oppressive prices? Of course there is a Fertilizer Trust. We may not be able to get after it during this administration, but thank God the time is just two years off when we will get after it. We started in that direction the last election, and we are going to finish the job two years from now.

Mr. NORRIS. If there ever was a Fertilizer Trust, it was in operation for a great many years, and why was nothing done about it during the Wilson administration?

Mr. HEFLIN. We broke up a good many trusts. The Republican Party had been in power almost 50 years when we came in, and it took the Democratic Party a long time to undo the deviliment the Republicans had done. We did much, but could not do it all in eight years' time; but you fooled the people, and they said they wanted a change.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not blame them.

Mr. HEFLIN. A great big husky farmer out in the Senator's State was one of them. They had a picture of him on a placard and represented him as saying, "We want a change, and we are going to have it." Then, after the Republican Party had been in power about a year and a half, they had a picture on the other side of the placard of the same fellow, with his features all distorted and twisted, saying, "A change! We got it—too much." [Laughter.] That is what happened. They got the change, and got it too much.

What does Ford propose to do? He offers to sell fertilizer to the farmers at 8 per cent profit on the cost of production. Mr. President, I am satisfied that to-day there are fertilizer concerns in this country that make 50 and 75 per cent profit on the farmer. God only knows how much profit some of them do make. Here is Ford specifically setting out that he will make a profit of not over 8 per cent. That is a fair proposition. His chief engineer says that in his opinion they can make fertilizers at half the price the farmer now pays for them. Mr. President, I submit that that makes out a good case for Ford and a good case for the farmers, for it will free the farmers from the combination of fertilizer concerns in the country.

The Senator said that we are not going to use that water power to help the washerwoman who lives away from Muscle Shoals. I submit to the Senator, while he is giving so much serious concern now to a washerwoman away out there somewhere in the meadows of his imagination, I would like to have him come down to a concrete proposition and have some sympathy for the millions of farmers and farmers' wives and children in my section who are held up and robbed every year by the fertilizer concerns of the country. I submit to the Senator that if Ford is permitted to use this power at Muscle Shoals to make fertilizer, the Alabama Power Co. and other power companies can use their power in serving the purposes that he discussed awhile ago.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to say a word?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will devote his energies and his eloquence to getting the Ford people to support the bill I have tried to get through, we will help the Alabama farmer ten thousand times more than the Ford proposition if carried out would help him. We will furnish him fertilizer at a price which does not include even an 8 per cent profit.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator can tell that to the marines. [Laughter.] Of course, the Senator thinks that. I am sure that he thinks that, but I am not responsible for that. It is as absurd and ridiculous as it would be for a man to undertake to bounce from the sidewalk of Washington without wings and fly to the moon. The idea of giving fertilizer to the farmers under his plan is at least amusing. Nothing will come out of his plan; I might just as well be frank about it. I believe, and I do not think the Senator knows it, probably, that there are interests encouraging his bill now which, the minute the Ford proposition was out of the way, would choke his bill to death.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator, with his Ford men, will come to my relief, I know we will have a majority in this body. They can be counted up without even putting the names on paper. The Senator knows that that is true. Everybody knows that it is true. It is because of the Ford opposition that we can not get it through.

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, no, Mr. President; I do not think the Senator could pass his bill if we did not have the Ford bill here. I believe there are combinations and special interests enough in this country, effective with the Republican powers that now be, that would fight his bill and kill it. We had men before the committee in the hearings, and I asked them some questions along this line, "Why are you advocating a course like that, when you have heretofore opposed the Government going into business of this kind?" They said they hated to see a private individual get hold of a big thing like the Muscle Shoals project; that we ought not to permit it—this great and wonderful project was greatly concerning them then. But let us pull the curtain aside and look at that group of Republican Members of Congress who went down there and when they came back recommended that this whole thing be junked.

Who brought this great project back from the junk pile to public consideration? Why, it was Henry Ford. Who kept it from being bartered for a song to sinister interests? Henry Ford. Who offered to use it for the benefit of millions of people? Henry Ford. Who pledged himself to build an industrial city and give people a place to live and a place to work? It was Henry Ford.

Nobody else has offered to do anything, and this stalking horse the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is following is a subterfuge. He thinks his measure might accomplish something, but whenever the opponents of Ford see him rise here and earnestly contend for the passage of that measure they laugh and say, "Everything is working all right."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, the Government is in control of it to-day, and it is being rented by the Alabama Power Co. at a nominal sum, is it not?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; Dam No. 2 is being rented to the Alabama Power Co. at a very nominal sum.

Mr. McKELLAR. Next to owning it themselves, I suppose they prefer to rent it from the Government at a nominal figure.

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly. They just sit back in their luxurious surroundings and say, "Hurrah for the Norris bill."

Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska made a speech in the Senate last fall on this very subject. I was having something to say upon it at that time, and the Senator from Nebraska came to the rescue of his bill and whatever there is back of it. That speech of his was widely circulated, and I do not know who did it. I had letters from people all over my country saying that the Norris speech, which attacked the Ford offer and which they thought was not a fair presentation of the Ford plan and purpose, was being circulated through the country. Who circulated that speech? I must confess I do not know. I suppose the Senator from Nebraska, sitting in front of me, knows who had his speech printed, whether he had it done or who had it put in pamphlet form. That is a matter I think the Senate and the country are entitled to know about.

Mr. President, the Senator mournfully said Henry Ford is about 60 years old. All of these Senators who are getting up in the Senator's class resent the mournful measure which suggests that 60 years even suggest old age. I heard considerable complaint in whispers here awhile ago when it was intimated that a fellow was about ready to pass off when he was 60 years of age.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will not look at me when he says that.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have no reference to my young and brilliant and handsome friend from Tennessee. He is young now and a friend of the people and will remain young until he is 90 years old. But the Senator from Nebraska said that Ford may not live long, that he would operate the Muscle Shoals project while he lives. He agrees to that. But he said that Ford will not live always, and manifests great concern as to what we are going to do when Ford finally goes away. Oh, Mr. President, it is really interesting and pathetic, in a way, to see this intensely sympathetic consideration that they seem to have for Henry Ford, and what might become of the Muscle Shoals project when he is gone. It is really touching. They seem to fear that the Muscle Shoals project would not be properly looked after when Henry Ford passes away.

I suggested in the hearings, in the Senator's presence in the committee room, that Ben Franklin, who established the Saturday Evening Post, provided that the Saturday Evening Post should always be sold at 5 cents, and that is being done to-day. What is to hinder Henry Ford from saying in his will, or in the contract that he would enter into, that fertilizer should be sold to the farmer as long as this corporation has this thing leased, at not above 8 per cent profit. That can be done; of course, it can be done. If Ben Franklin could provide that the Saturday Evening Post should be sold always at 5 cents, Henry Ford can arrange for a certain price for fertilizer, and we will have it arranged to the satisfaction of my good friend from Nebraska, I trust, who has one of the most vivid imaginations that I have ever seen in operation in senatorial debate.

Mr. President, the Senator said that Ford wants a gift. I submit it would be better to give it to him and let him operate it, if he would give human beings employment and make fertilizer cheaper to the farmers than it is at present, and furnish nitrates to the Government in time of war. I submit it would be under such a situation a good thing for the Government just to give it to him outright. That would be better than the course recommended by certain Republicans, when they suggested in the House that it be abandoned, junked, thrown away.

Ford comes here and says, "I will give you $5,000,000 for these abandoned plants, and you will still own the dam. You complete it and make your river navigable, and I will put up so much money for the upkeep of the dam. At the end of the hundred years the dam will still belong to you and you can do then what you want to do with it. My lease will be out, and in the meantime I will have operated it and furnished fertilizer to the farmers for a century." How much money would that save them? It would save them many billions of dollars in fertilizer alone.

If the Government should become embroiled in war with a foreign country, how delightful it would be to have these two nitrate plants turned over to the Government, away down on the Tennessee River, to manufacture munitions of war. How good a thing it would be to be free from dependence on Chile, and instead of paying Chile each year in time of peace for fertilizers forty-odd million dollars that money would be kept at home. I submit to the Senator from Nebraska that that is quite a good item to consider. It is a patriotic consideration.

In case of war we would be absolutely independent for our nitrate supply of all the nations of the earth. Ford offers to aid the Government in case of war. But to hear the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] speak you would think nobody was to be benefited but Henry Ford and his corporate concern; that they were going down there to feed and fatten upon the substance of the Government at Muscle Shoals, when the fact is he proposes to bless and benefit the agricultural sections. That is what he offers to do, and charge a profit of only 8 per cent on the fertilizer made.

The Government has no more idea of operating that plant and manufacturing fertilizer than it has of flying across the ocean, and I regret to see the Senator from Nebraska standing in the way of the Ford offer with a bill that has no chance of ever passing and being put in working form. I would like to have him put his bill out of the way and help us to put through the Senate the Ladd bill, which contains the Ford offer. This will be of benefit to the people.

Now, in conclusion, Mr. President, I desire to say that I in this last statement simply wanted to call to the attention of the Senate Mr. Mayo's statement supporting what I said regarding the matter of selling fertilizer to the farmer at half the price he paid when Mayo testified before the Senate Committee on Agriculture in April.

For that reason I want to urge upon the Senate and the Congress to take favorable action, and let this man who has done so much in the industrial world go down to Muscle Shoals and operate that great plant.

Who is it that is fighting Henry Ford to the death and does not want him to go to Muscle Shoals? It is the Wall Street interests. Do you know why? He went up there once to borrow $100,000,000, I understand, from Wall Street, and he talked to them about it, and they asked him about his property. They said, "All right, Mr. Ford. We can let you have the money." Finally they brought in a man, so the story goes, and introduced him to Mr. Ford, and said to him, "This man will be your treasurer." Ford said, "Treasurer for what?" "To take charge of your business and to handle all the cash that comes in and goes out." Ford said, "Handle whose cash?" "Handle your cash." "Why," he said, "I will do nothing of the kind. I do not have to get this money from you. You can go to a climate that is a good deal hotter than this" [laughter], and he walked out of Wall Street. That is why Wall Street hates him. Any man who rises up in spite of the special governmental-privileged gang in America and so establishes himself that he can raise $100,000,000 without bowing and crawling on his knees to Wall Street is hated by Wall Street, and before they would let him have hold of a project like Muscle Shoals they would use every power at their command to prevent it. But we have beaten Wall Street. Ford is already well established in Michigan, and if he should go down into Alabama and build a great industrial city in the Tennessee Valley along the lordly Tennessee they would fear him in the industrial world; they would fear him in the financial world. They do not want that sort of thing to happen, and they are reaching out in every way they can to nip it in the bud and to destroy every possible chance of Henry Ford getting Muscle Shoals. But they are not going to succeed. I believe that four-fifths of the people of the United States are in favor of the Ford offer on Muscle Shoals, and they intend to see to it that their will is written into law.

SALARY AND MILEAGE OF HON. CHARLES A. RAWSON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). The question is on agreeing to Senate Resolution 375.

The resolution was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Hon. Charles A. Rawson $493.15, salary from November 8, 1922, to December 1, 1922, both dates inclusive, and $459.20, mileage for attendance at the third session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, said sums being due him as a Senator from the State of Iowa.

ROY H. RANKIN AND EDNA T. VOGEL.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate Resolution 376, submitted yesterday by Mr. CUMMINS, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Roy H. Rankin $182.67 and to Edna T. Vogel $122.67, for clerical services rendered the Hon. Charles A. Rawson, a Senator from the State of Iowa, from November 8, 1922, to December 1, 1922, both dates inclusive.

THE DIRECT PRIMARY SYSTEM.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD in 8-point type an editorial from the Philadelphia North American entitled "The war on the primary."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

THE WAR ON THE PRIMARY.

[From the Philadelphia North American, December 6, 1922.]

In the revolutions which have made and unmade the political structures of nations during the last half century there has been one dominating impulse—the unquenchable desire of mankind for self-government. Democracy is the universal goal. Even among the backward peoples of the distant east, where from the dawn of history slavish obedience to despotic authority has been an instinct, there is a growing ferment that threatens the existence of native and foreign absolutism. The advance of humanity toward democracy is a movement as resistless as the tides.

Lincoln's definition of democracy as "government of the people by the people for the people" has been embedded in the American political creed. The founders of the Republic held no such conception of government, for they limited the right of franchise to owners of property. A proposal to confer it upon men without property, not to speak of negroes and women, would not have received a moment's consideration. Yet the ideal democracy portrayed in Lincoln's memorable utterance inevitably will be the consummation of the great experiment which the founders inaugurated.

During the century and a half that has elapsed since then the franchise has been greatly extended, and at the same time the election laws have been broadened, all with a view of making government more representative. For the right of voting means nothing unless those who possess it can freely and effectually exercise it. Keeping pace with the extension of the franchise, therefore, was a demand for election laws safeguarding the rights and increasing the influence of the voter.

After growth of population had made unworkable the old New England town-meeting method of selecting public officers, the political leaders of that day arrogated to themselves the right to choose the candidates to represent different parties and policies. But this autocratic control by a small group was not long tolerated by the increasing number of enfranchised citizens. Under pressure it gave way to the somewhat more representative system of the caucus, under which a larger number of leaders and politicians participated in the selection of candidates.

This change, however, did not end but rather intensified the arbitrary control by a few. Determined opposition to the rule of "King Caucus" forced the politicians to give way again. They conceded that the party voters might name delegates to represent them in nominating conventions; but in practice the local organizations picked the delegates and the bigger bosses voted them in bunches when the convention met.

After years of experience had shown that the new method was not producing representative democracy but continued the concentration of power in the hands of a few party leaders and professional politicians, nation-wide sentiment forced further liberalization. In many States there were passed laws regulating the primary elections; though of varying effectiveness, the essential aim of all was to decentralize power, taking it from the bosses and returning it to the party voters. Gradually control of the rules governing the primaries was taken from the leaders, strong safeguards were thrown around these elections, and the choosing of delegates was put in the hands of the voters. Eventually States took over the task of conducting the primaries, compelling all parties to participate and to make their nominations on the same day; not infrequently the requirements are more stringent than for the general elections. In many States the direct primary method extends to the selection of national delegates.

While the system of State-controlled direct primaries was being slowly evolved, a nation-wide movement for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people, based upon the same principle, was in progress. The election of these important officials by the legislatures of the various States, as provided by the Federal Constitution, had not only made the Senate a stronghold of reaction and privilege, but had produced scandals which brought American Government into disrepute. To revolutionize the system it was necessary to amend the Constitution and have the change ratified by 36 of the legislatures whose prerogative it was to abolish. Only a powerful and insistent public demand could have brought about such a result.

Zealous advocates of the primary laws had believed that immediately following their enactment good government would be achieved; in this, of course, they were disappointed. The politicians, on the other hand, were agreeably surprised to find that their powers had not been drastically curtailed; indeed, it was demonstrated that by their superior industry and their grip of the organizations they could turn the new method to their advantage. Yet it was not strange that the results should be inconclusive. The most liberal and carefully devised election laws can not automatically produce good government. All they can do is to provide the people with opportunity to express and enforce their demands. The rights of democracy are nullified when they are neglected, but when exercised they are irresistible.

Ten years ago the opposition of the bosses to the direct primary had virtually subsided; they still were against it as a matter of consistency, but accepted it wherever the demand was sufficiently strong. In 1912, however, events changed from acquiescence to hostility the politicians and predatory interests which then controlled the Republican Party. Their choice for the presidential nomination was President Taft, who had been elected four years before, against the wishes of the old guard, as an exponent of the Roosevelt policies, but who had surrendered to the reactionaries and deserted the cause he was elected to serve. In response to a great popular demand, Theodore Roosevelt took the field as an opposing candidate.

Virtually all the States which were under old guard domination and had not adopted the direct primary sent Taft delegates to the convention; these, together with colored delegations from the South, comprised his entire strength. In all States having the direct primary Roosevelt submitted his candidacy to the Republican voters, and was overwhelmingly chosen over Taft in every contest save one, which resulted in an even division. The Roosevelt forces entered the convention with a clear majority of the legally elected delegates. His nomination, however, would have been a fatal blow to the old guard leaders. To prevent it, therefore, they set up fraudulent contests and unseated nearly 100 Roosevelt delegates, replacing them with hand-picked Taft delegates.

Upon Taft's acceptance of the nomination thus stolen, the Progressive Party came into being, and at the election Roosevelt received such an overwhelming majority of the Republican vote that Taft carried only Vermont and Utah, with eight electoral votes. The party bosses and old guard leaders everywhere laid their defeat to the direct primary; and it is undeniable that if that means of expression had not been open to the party voters, Roosevelt would not have elected 20 per cent of the national delegates.

Since 1912 the bosses and the dwindling old guard have bided their time for a chance to destroy the direct primary or impair its effectiveness. So long as they represented only a minority of the party membership they worked cautiously, but after nominating their chosen candidate in 1916 they began organizing to wipe out the primary system. Their defeat at that election, and the warning of Roosevelt's increasing prestige, foreshadowing his nomination in 1920, caused them to defer open attacks, but following his death their propaganda became active.

A new factor of the greatest importance then came into the situation—the impending enfranchisement of women. These prospective new voters could not be classified as machine followers but were naturally independent. Virtually all the bosses had opposed equal suffrage, and they knew that women are instinctively against their evil methods. Adoption of the eighteenth amendment had also arrayed against the primary system the liquor interests, likewise fearful of the women. And these forces, unable to prevent the enfranchisement of women, deliberately sought to nullify their voting privilege by depriving them of the direct primary system.

Iowa bosses made a start by putting through a law requiring a candidate to poll 35 per cent of the vote cast in order to gain a nomination; then they put up five candidates for the Senate, believing the vote would be so split that the choice would rest with a convention. The answer was the nomination, and later the election, of the man they most feared. Efforts were made to repeal the primary law in Indiana, but A. J. Beveridge aroused the women voters and the whole State, and the plan was blocked. Idaho enemies of Senator BORAH are striving to break down the system there. New York Republican leaders are against it. The nation-wide drive for its abolition was boldly revealed a few weeks ago in a hostile address by Secretary Weeks, who echoed the known views of President Harding. Meantime there is an incessant newspaper propaganda of deprecation.

In the face of this vicious campaign it is fortunate that Pennsylvania stands forth as a competent witness to both the deficiencies and benefits of the direct primary. Until 15 years ago the convention system enabled the State bosses to make a mockery of popular government. Adoption of the uniform primary for a long time made hardly a perceptible change, for the powerfully organized machine was able to pervert the system to its own use. But the time came when the voters made use of their right, and the result was the nomination of Gifford Pinchot for governor and of GEORGE WHARTON PEPPER and DAVID A. REED for the United States Senate. No rational person would seriously contend that under the old system three such men could have been elected to the highest offices in the State.

Election day is the outstanding symbol and triumph of democracy. On that day the Government is passed back to the people; theirs is then the absolute power to declare who shall conduct its affairs and how. Primary day is no less vital; indeed, in States where one party is dominant, it is at the primary that public officers are really selected. The voters do not always make full use of the system, but they are thoroughly aware of its supreme value as a factor in self-government, and those benighted public men and politicians who think they can snatch this weapon of civil liberty from the American people might as well undertake to abolish the ballot.

Nothing is more certain than that the party or the leadership that persistently makes war upon the direct primary will meet merited disaster. The movement toward full self-government is irresistible. There is only one surer way of starting a revolution than by resisting an impelling demand for popular rights, and that is by attempting to wrest from the people fundamental rights they have once enjoyed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 8, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 7, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, whose guardian care extends over us to protect, to guide, and to nourish, Thou hast never left alone one human heart that came to Thee for help. Truly Thy all-embracing love gathers within its circle the world of men. O let Thy word of wisdom and Thy word of knowledge weave themselves into all hearts and may they serve as an inspiration to all right living. Aid us to put forth our own energies, and these efforts shall lift us to a higher plane. Be gracious to come to us, and may Thy instruction be childlike, simple, and human. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1452. An act providing for establishing shooting grounds for the public, for establishing game refuges and breeding grounds, for protecting migratory birds, and requiring a Federal license to hunt them; and

S. 4037. An act to amend the grade percentages of enlisted men as prescribed in section 4b of the national defense act, as amended.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIII, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4037. An act to amend the grade percentages of enlisted men as prescribed in section 4b of the national defense act, as amended; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 1452. An act providing for establishing shooting grounds for the public, for establishing game refuges and breeding grounds, for protecting migratory birds, and requiring a Federal license to hunt them; to the Committee on Agriculture.

PENSIONS.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3275) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars, and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows, agree to the conference asked by the Senate, and that the Speaker appoint the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 3275, a pension bill, agree to the conference asked by the Senate, and appoint the conferees. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Illinois what are the points of difference between the Senate and the House?

Mr. FULLER. The bill as passed by the House is virtually a substitute for the Senate bill. It made no change in the rates proposed, but there is some difference in the phraseology. There is simply the one amendment on the part of the House, and that is virtually a substitute for the original Senate bill.

Mr. GARNER. But that does not tell us what is the difference between the two Houses.

Mr. FULLER. The difference in one respect is that the Senate fixed the age of a widow at 62 years before she would be entitled to receive an increase, and that has been left out in the House amendment. Another provision in the Senate bill extended the period of the Civil War down to some time in August, 1866, which would permit a man who enlisted even a year after the surrender of Lee to be entitled to a pension if he served 90 days after that time. The House struck that out.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, the Senate bill, as I recall, provided for a $50 pension to the widow of a soldier without regard to the time of marriage.

Mr. FULLER. Yes. They wiped out the marriage limit entirely, and provided that if she was married before the passage of the act she should be entitled to a pension. We changed that, fixing the limitation at June 27, 1915, or, if married after that date, that she must have lived with the soldier not less than two years, and until he died.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the House bill is a very liberal bill. I think we should have some idea of the attitude of the conferees on the part of the House before the bill goes to conference. If there is a disposition upon the part of the House conferees to give way to the Senate, we will have some hesitancy, some of us at least, in sending the bill to conference.

The bill as it passed the House was just as liberal, in my opinion, as the sentiment of the House justifies. As a matter of fact, there were a good many in the House who were not altogether happy about some of the provisions as it passed the House and who would be entirely against some of the Senate provisions. I should like to know something about the attitude of the House conferees in the matter.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I fully agree, so far as I am personally concerned, with what the gentleman from Wyoming says. I think the bill as it passed the House is a very fair and liberal measure, and I would not, under any consideration, agree to the provision that a widow who married an old soldier on his deathbed should be entitled the next day to a pension for life. Under no circumstances would I agree to that. I can assure the gentleman that the conferees on the part of the House will insist on the House amendment.

Mr. GARNER. But you come pretty nearly doing it in the House bill in any event. I do not think any defense can be made of that provision in the House bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, it is rather strange that we are now considering the House bill for the first time. The bill went through the House without any discussion, and now on the matter of a conference report we are discussing the respective merits of the House and the Senate bills.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. What is the marriageable date now, under the law?

Mr. FULLER. June 27, 1905.

Mr. KINCHELOE. What was the idea in extending that date?

Mr. FULLER. One idea was to prevent the great flood of special bills coming in all of the time, some of them very pitiful cases, asking for special pensions, where they were married after the date fixed by the present law. One of the great merits of the present bill as it passed the House, in my opinion, is that it will do away very largely with this flood of special bills.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Does the gentleman think that the date he fixed is much improvement on the Senate bill?

Mr. FULLER. I think it is.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the House bill is as liberal in all respects as the bill ought to be, and the bill should not go to conference unless we can have some assurance of the outcome.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I can not coincide with the position taken by our distinguished leader upon this matter. It seems to me that the Senate bill is a good, fair, liberal bill. These old fellows are dying off every moment; thousands of them are passing beyond. Let anyone go through a soldiers' home, as I did recently in Quincy, and he will realize that practically all of them are in the hospital, but a little way from the graveyards. Why should we be impecunious and stingy?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, there is no difference between the House and the Senate bill in respect to the pensions for the old soldiers. We are all agreed on that. There are other provisions in the Senate bill the House objected to.

Mr. KING. I do not agree with the gentleman's position. He is not leading this proposition in the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Both bills pension the soldiers at the same rate and under practically the same conditions. But there are other provisions in the bill which have nothing to do with the men who fought in the Civil War. The House has gone quite as far in regard to those matters as it is justified in doing until we have further knowledge of the attitude of the conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman may have that information now. There is no question but what the conferees will insist upon the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, with that assurance, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

STATE DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a report from the Committee on Appropriations which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13232; Rept. 1265) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves all points of order, and it is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REGENT, SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in place of Mr. Padgett, deceased, Mr. MOORE of Virginia.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing two of the printed statements issued by the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman be a little more specific?

Mr. WINGO. One is dated September 30, 1922, and the other December 4, the ordinary general statements which the Treasury issues. There is special reason why the public ought to have that in the RECORD and available.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The statements are as follows:

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following resignation.

The Clerk read as follows:

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., December 5, 1922.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SPEAKER: I have tendered to Gov. A. M. Hyde my resignation as Representative in Congress from the first district of Missouri, effective December 5, 1922.

It is with extreme regret that I sever my official connection with the House, and I desire to take this opportunity to express to you and to the Members of the House my sincere thanks for the many courtesies extended to me and to utter my appreciation of the delightful associations it has been my pleasure to enjoy during my service there.

With renewed assurances of my best personal wishes, I am,

Yours very truly,

FRANK C. MILLSPAUGH.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13180) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] whether we can agree on time for general debate.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think so. How much time does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. MADDEN. I would suggest two and a half hours.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is an hour and a quarter to a side.

Mr. MADDEN. Or it might be that we could get through quicker.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will agree on three hours, an hour and a half to a side.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that general debate continue for three hours, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that general debate continue for three hours, one-half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee and one-half by himself. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion of the gentleman.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13180) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, with Mr. SANDERS of Indiana in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13180) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to be able to announce to the House that the Committee on Appropriations has five bills practically ready for presentation to the House. This bill is the first bill taken up for consideration. We hope to be able to present all the bills making appropriations for the fiscal year 1924 not later than the middle of next month. [Applause.]

I wish to talk to you a little about the effectiveness of the Budget and the detail of its operation. The Budget, as you will realize, places the responsibility on the President of the United States of stating a program which he proposes to enter upon this next year and indicate the cost. The President has accepted the responsibility that is placed upon him by the law, and he has exercised that responsibility in a remarkable way. [Applause.] For the first time in the history of the country, I think, a President of the United States has really paid great attention to the cost of government. President Harding has, and he has done so very systematically, and he deserves the commendation of the Congress for his activity in this direction and the thanks of the American people for the results of his activity.

There are 22 statements printed in the Budget that I would like every Member of the House to read. I shall not have time to go into them, but they are very important; they are illuminating; they are interesting; they show the painstaking care which has been applied to the preparation of the Budget, and any person who is interested in the finances of the United States will be well repaid for the time he may take in studying this Budget system.

The estimates for 1924 request appropriations amounting to $3,669,000,000, in round figures. That includes the Postal Service. The estimate for the Postal Service is submitted as $590,000,000. Exclusive of the Postal Service, the recommendation of appropriations for all the other activities of the Government amounts to $3,079,000,000, which is $150,000,000 less than the like estimates in the Budget for 1923, submitted a year ago. The appropriations for 1923 in round figures were $3,838,000,000, including the Postal Service.

The Postal Service appropriations amount to $564,000,000, or, exclusive of the Postal Service, the entire appropriations for 1923 amount to $3,274,000,000, making the estimates for 1924, exclusive of the Postal Service, $195,000,000 less than the appropriations for 1923. Included in the $195,000,000 of reduction is $125,000,000 of interest accumulated on the war-savings certificates issued in 1918. These war-savings certificates then issued had a face value of about $825,000,000. They were sold at a discount. The amount received for them was about $500,000,000. The interest accumulated is over the five-year period, and this $125,000,000 really is chargeable from 1918 up to the present time, and only a portion of it could under any circumstances be attributed to the expense of the fiscal year 1924.

Then, we have $38,000,000 reduction on account of the $240 bonus, which is not estimated in the Budget for 1924. It never has been estimated for by the executive branch of the Government. For neither of these items is there a corresponding item in 1924. The $163,000,000 compressed in the two items to which I have alluded leave a net reduction in all other items of $32,000,000. The bonus has never been submitted to the Congress by the executive branch, as I said. It has always been by congressional action, and it is fair to assume that the Budget has been prepared in this instance with the expectation that the bonus will be continued, because no recommendations have been made through the Budget for any general increase in compensation to persons in the Government service.

The estimates for the Postal Service for 1924 show an increase of $26,000,000 over 1923. This is due to the constantly increasing volume of business done by the Postal Department.

There is a reduction of $50,000,000 in the estimates for the Shipping Board, due to the fact that the amount then appropriated for 1923 for payment of claims is not being repeated for 1924. And I may say here in this connection that the Shipping Board, out of the $50,000,000 appropriated for the payment of claims, advises me that they have settled all the claims that were then pending, and they expect to pay into the Treasury of the United States about $20,000,000 of the $50,000,000 that was set aside for that purpose, and that the claims will be settled by the balance. [Applause.]

They are not asking anything for next year for that purpose. [Applause.] They will ask, of course, for money to operate; but I wish to say that under Mr. Lasker's management they have made good the promises which he made. When he came before the Committee on Appropriations more than a year ago he found the treasury of the Shipping Board with a $17,000,000 deficit. To-day the treasury of the Shipping Board has $138,000,000 in fact, and not more than $38,000,000 of that will be drawn against, while I think the other $100,000,000 will be carried to the general fund of the Treasury for general purposes. [Applause.]

I am very proud to be able to make this statement, because I believed that Mr. Lasker would make good when he came in, and I am gratified to know the extent to which he has made good since he came in.

There is a net increase of $22,000,000 in the estimates for the Veterans' Bureau. There is a decrease in the item for military and naval compensation of $42,000,000. There is a decrease in the medical and hospital item of $12,000,000, and a decrease of $22,000,000 in the vocational training item.

A new item appears under the Veterans' Bureau calling for $90,000,000 to supplement the military and naval insurance fund in the insurance of the World War veterans. This is due to the fact that the premium collections are estimated to be $90,000,000 less than the payments which are estimated to be required to be made on account of losses on the insurance in force. There is about $2,000,000,000 of insurance in force on 216,000 policies.

There is a new item of $33,000,000 not appearing in the 1923 appropriation in the present Budget, due to the contract obligations under the authorization of $65,000,000 carried in the road bill, which was passed at the last session of Congress. Any funds required by the States for 1923 under the roads authorization will probably be submitted in a deficiency bill a little later during this session.

The estimates for military and naval force for 1924 are practically the same as those for 1923, and for the existing personnel, so that we come before you in advance of the report of the military and naval bills with the information, stated in a general way, that you need not expect any increase in the amount to be paid for the Army or the Navy or in the number of men to be enlisted or the number of officers to be retained.

The estimated deficit on the basis of actual receipts and expenditures at the beginning of the fiscal year 1922 was $759,000,000. At the close of 1922 there was an actual surplus of $314,000,000, which showed the efficiency with which the administrative side of the Government, coupled with the economies enforced by the Congress, has functioned. To take a $759,000,000 deficit at the beginning of the year and change it into a $314,000,000 surplus at the end of the year was no mean achievement. [Applause.] I think the people of the United States ought to know what was done. The indicated deficit for 1923 was $697,000,000 on the basis of preliminary figures submitted by the departments on July 1 last. The increase in estimated receipts and the decrease in estimated expenditures have reduced the apparent 1923 deficit to $274,000,000 as of this date. I said last July that it was not as bad as it looked. There are obligations to be met during 1923 due to the Federal control of railroads of about $211,000,000. If it were not for this, a war-period obligation, the amount of the deficit for 1923 would be reduced to $63,000,000.

The 1924 estimates of receipts and expenditures show an indicated surplus of $181,000,000. If we take the 1922 surplus of $314,000,000 and the 1924 estimated surplus of $181,000,000, you will find they aggregate $495,000,000, and if the indicated deficit of $274,000,000 for 1923 is deducted from the aggregate surplus of 1922 and 1924 you will see that we have in the three years of Mr. Harding's administration a net estimated surplus of approximately $220,000,000. [Applause].

I am not worried about these so-called indicated deficits that appear when the bureaus make their preliminary estimates of expenses of the Government and receipts a year in advance. We have fixed policies not only of economy but of systematic conduct of the business of the Government. The President of the United States has not only invited his Cabinet into his confidential councils in the matter of instituting economy in Government but he has also invited and directed every bureau chief to appear before the tribunal of the Chief Magistrate of the Nation, and they have all been told that they must economize in the work under their jurisdiction. The result has been marvelous. The President is entitled to the thanks of the American people for the fidelity with which he has administered the affairs of the Nation. [Applause.]

And when we consider that all this has been accomplished in the face of constantly decreasing revenues, the record is a remarkable achievement. We ought to be proud of it, and I am sure that when the American people realize the complications, the perplexing problems that have confronted us, they will be happy to give credit where credit is due.

The postal deficit for 1922 is $64,000,000. The estimated deficit for 1923 is $31,500,000; but the estimated surplus for 1924 is in the neighborhood of $1,000,000.

Reorganization in the Postal Service is taking place every day. New economies are being introduced, better business methods employed, all leading to a better performance in this wonderful service. Some of the offices have been reorganized, and where they have been reorganized great economies have resulted. Some effort was made by Members in another body during the consideration of the last Post Office appropriation bill to add a number of places to the service in the department here; but the conferees who were Members of this House refused to concur. We believed then, as we ascertained later to be the fact, that a great reduction could be made in the forces that then existed, and shortly after we refused to allow the increased number of people there we were advised that 149 of the existing employees were dismissed as no longer necessary.

The public debt is being gradually reduced and is now more than $1,000,000,000 less than it was at the beginning of the fiscal year 1922.

It is increasingly important, gentlemen, that economy be practiced in all the branches of the Government. The fact that there is an indicated surplus for 1924 of $181,000,000 should not be an invitation to anybody to get extravagant notions or to urge legislation that might lead to extravagant expenditures.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. MADDEN. In just a moment. The fact that there is an indicated surplus of $181,000,000 for 1924 should be no excuse for extravagance, but every dollar of surplus should be used to reduce the public debt and to stop the payment of interest.

Mr. LONDON. How was the decrease of the public debt accomplished?

Mr. MADDEN. It was accomplished partly by the use of the surplus of $313,000,000, partly by the use of the sinking fund and other public-debt retirement receipts, and partly by a reduction in the net balance in the general fund of the Treasury.

Now I get to the bill. The regular annual appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1923 for the Treasury Department aggregated $118,844,828. The permanent and indefinite appropriations aggregated $1,336,146,910, or a total of $1,454,739,044.

The total of the estimates for the appropriations of the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1924, exclusive of any amount for increased compensation, is $11,005,877.16 less than the appropriations for 1923. This reduction consists of a decrease of $1,011,059.94 in the estimates of regular annual appropriations and $9,994,817 in the estimates of permanent and indefinite appropriations. The amount recommended to be appropriated in the accompanying bill is $115,000,000 in round numbers, and is $3,725,018.44 less than the total of 1923 regular annual appropriations, and $2,713,958.50 less than the budget estimates for the fiscal year 1924.

The appropriations for the public-debt service show a reduction from $3,700,000 to $3,250,000, or a decrease of $450,000, and that is due to the fact that we are dispensing with the services of several hundred people in that branch of the service.

Next I come to the customs service. An increase was requested in the Budget for collecting revenue from customs from $11,300,000 to $12,250,000. Of the additional $950,000 the sum of $500,000 was requested to be made immediately available for the remainder of the fiscal year 1923, and $450,000 for the fiscal year 1924.

The committee recommends a total of $11,950,000, an increase over the current appropriation of $650,000, and of this amount $200,000 is suggested to be made immediately available.

The amount allowed will provide for an additional personnel of approximately 300 people, and makes provision for laboratory facilities in connection with work on imported dyes. The additional personnel will bring the total number employed up to approximately 7,400 people in the customs service. But even that number will be 900 less than the service had employed in 1912.

The committee feels justified in recommending this increase because of the tremendous increase in customs business and because of the additional administrative duties placed upon the service by the recent tariff act.

The revenue collected from customs during the month of October, 1922, which was the first full month after the new act went into effect, was $40,000,000. The amount collected during the month of November exceeded $41,500,000. It is estimated that the revenues from this service during the fiscal year 1923 will be $450,000,000. The largest collections from customs in any prior fiscal year is that for the fiscal year 1922, which amounted to $356,000,000, and the 1922 collections were $23,000,000 higher than any other previous year.

The customs service is not able to handle the volume of business coming to our ports with its present force. Congestion exists on the docks and in the appraisers' warehouses. Much of the imported goods is not handled as efficiently as it should be handled due to the shortage of help, and the chief of the division stated to the committee that in his judgment additional revenue, approximating $25,000,000 annually, could be collected with a more adequate personnel.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What the gentleman has just said would seem to prove that the present tariff law is not prohibitive.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the present tariff law has proved its own case and the wisdom of the gentleman from Ohio and other gentlemen associated with him. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman has just made a statement that an extra $25,000,000 could be collected. Can the gentleman give the reason for that?

Mr. MADDEN. The reason why they say they can collect $25,000,000 more is that with the present inadequate force they are unable to make personal investigation of the value of the goods that come in, and they must take the value stated in the invoice.

Mr. SNELL. Is there an additional appropriation for that purpose in this bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. What does it amount to?

Mr. MADDEN. It amounts to $650,000.

Mr. SNELL. And by the expenditure of an additional $650,000 the gentleman hopes to collect an additional $25,000,000?

Mr. MADDEN. I think it may be $50,000,000, but we place it at the lowest figure. The committee is of the opinion that the amount recommended should be approved by the House in order that the Government may receive the full amount of revenue to which it is entitled under the law, and that importers of merchandise may be able promptly to have their goods examined, appraised, and passed.

Now, I would like to use a little time in reference to the Internal Revenue Service. The appropriations for the Internal Revenue Service are decreased from $60,628,380 for the current year to $57,060,290 for the next year. The sum allowed is $3,568,090 less than the current appropriation and $1,608,400 less than the amount requested in the Budget.

The decreases in the appropriations are mainly due to three causes—the declaration by the Supreme Court of the United States of the unconstitutionality of the child labor law, a decrease because of the transfer of the printing and binding allotment to the general departmental appropriation for that purpose, and a decrease in the force engaged in the audit of the personal-tax return. The committee has cut the amount allowed by the Budget for collecting and assessing taxes by $1,500,000. It is believed from the rate of expenditure during the first quarter of the fiscal year and making allowances for such additions to the force in the audit of corporation returns as may be made during this year, that the amount allowed will be sufficient to maintain the service during the next fiscal year.

The collections of internal revenue decreased from $4,595,357,061.95 for the fiscal year 1921 to $3,197,451,083 for the fiscal year 1922, or approximately 30 per cent. The estimated collections for the fiscal year 1923 show a further reduction to $2,400,000,000. The number of income-tax returns filed shows a decrease from 8,716,072 for the calendar year 1921 to 7,568,222 for the calendar year 1922. The disposal of the arrearage of work in the examination of returns for previous years shows a substantial gain.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has the gentleman any information as to the cause of the large falling off in the revenue?

Mr. MADDEN. My judgment is that many people who showed large profits previously, and where the largest number of returns were made, showed losses, and that they also employed means by which they avoided the payment of taxes on account of the large surtax.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does not the gentleman think that it can be accounted for in large measure by the enormous amount of money that has been invested in tax-exempt securities?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. They avoid the payment of taxes in all ways that they can. They do not invest their money in business enterprises that would give employment to men and women, but they invest the surplus in nontaxable securities.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has the gentleman any accurate information as to the amount of nontaxable securities outstanding?

Mr. MADDEN. We did not go into that, and I do not know.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I noticed by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury that the amount is increasing to the extent of a billion dollars a year. An estimate says that there is at least $15,000,000,000 now outstanding which of course escapes taxation altogether.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for me to ask a question of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does the department undertake to collect statistics in connection with income-tax returns that tend to show to what extent investments are now represented by tax-exempt securities?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not think they undertake to do that, but the fact is that a number of very rich men in the last few years have been investing in municipal bonds and other tax-exempt securities.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It seems to me that it might be possible for the Treasury Department to gather statistics along that line which might prove very important. I had an inquiry the other day from my own State to which I was obliged to reply by saying that I did not believe such statistics are now available.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not think they are available, and I do not think the Treasury Department has any machinery to get them accurately.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I believe in the income-tax returns of the last year there was a question which called for an answer as to the amount of money invested in various bonds, and that should have supplied the information.

Mr. LONGWORTH. There was a suggestion made by some gentlemen in the Treasury Department as to the possibility of providing in the revenue law a different method of taxation for income derived from municipal bonds, but it has never gone any further than that, so far as I know.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. The Secretary of the Treasury, or at least those in the department, have stated to our committee that they had no basis for fixing that sum, but Doctor Seligman, who was before our committee, made the statement that at least $20,000,000,000 were subject to investment by those who desire to so invest.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The $20,000,000 000 did not represent merely the amount of municipal securities, but also Liberty bonds, and so forth.

Mr. FREAR. All securities that would escape taxation.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman advise the House how many are employed in the Internal Revenue Department?

Mr. MADDEN. I think about 22,000, of whom 3,900 are in the prohibition unit.

I have only a few minutes of time left, and I do want to state some things that I think the House would be interested in. Since 1917 it may be interesting for the House and the country to know that the Government has collected in taxes through the Internal Revenue Department the sum of $21,558,531,640.48. It is also interesting to note that there was assessed and collected as a result of these audits, audits on returns submitted by taxpayers, the sum of $1,230,209,618. That amount has been collected on underpaid schedules. That is to say, the taxpayer filed a schedule, and the audit showed that his figures were not sufficient to meet his obligation to the Government, and a new assessment was made, and upon the assessments since 1917, up to the present time, resulting from these audits over $1,320,000,000 have been collected. On overpaid schedules there have been claims by the taxpayers for refunds, and the audits made up to the time they have the information show that the payments amounting to $102,547,448.39 had been paid. I think this is a remarkable showing. Out of $21,000,000,000 less than one-half of 1 per cent has been returned so far because of overpayment. It is true that all of the audits have not been made. We are still auditing the consolidated returns for 1917, and the force is being concentrated on the audit of the 1917 consolidated returns because the statute of limitations runs by the 4th of March next, and it is hoped that all of these returns will be audited and all assessments made for any underpayments before the statute runs.

Mr. CRISP. Is it the policy of the Treasury Department when this audit has been filed, if the taxpayer has overpaid, for the Government to notify the taxpayer?

Mr. MADDEN. It is. They have now so completed the system that when they discover a taxpayer has overpaid, they send a certificate of credit for the amount of the overpayment to the internal-revenue collector of the district in which the man resides, with a request that the collector look up the record of the taxpayer's obligations to the Government, if any, and if he owes the Government anything in that particular district he deducts the credit from what he owes.

Mr. CRISP. I asked the question because we have all had cases where our constituents have been writing to attorneys here in Washington.

Mr. MADDEN. They have now a very perfect system, and they do not approve of any overpayment or credit until after it has been sent to the local internal-revenue collector and he checks it up and it comes back again with his O. K. The matter goes through three or four or five processes before the record is completed.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I understand that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, there were about 20,000 unadjusted claims for refund of taxes paid in excess, and the statement of the commissioner showed that he was running behind about 20,000 each year, and that every two years he would run behind one year in the adjustment of those claims.

Mr. MADDEN. The record shows that they are making an advance.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. How many years will it take them to get up to date?

Mr. MADDEN. Of course they are auditing on the consolidated returns for 1917 now, and nobody could tell how long it would take, but on the personal income taxes under the 1040 form, as I understand, they are nearly current.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. The report I have from the commissioner over his own signature would show he is running behind one year in two, and according to that rate he never would catch up.

Mr. MADDEN. This is where we are getting to, but still——

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. FESS. I have a great many inquiries asking in reference to the audit of 1917, 1918, 1920, and up to the present time, and I have reported that the audit will be given of 1918, and our friends ask why can they not have all at once. I do not know how to answer them.

Mr. MADDEN. They are working on the consolidated return of 1917, because they want to complete that work before the statute of limitations runs.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. What is a consolidated return?

Mr. MADDEN. A consolidated return is a return made by a corporation like the United States Steel Company, where there is a parent corporation and a number of subsidiary corporations and an ascertainment of taxes due from each corporation connected with the parent corporation—that is the one thing that makes the difficulty of auditing.

Mr. FESS. How shall I reply to business friends in my State asking why these audits can not be made for the full term instead of in one year?

Mr. MADDEN. The reason that they can not be made for the full term is that they can not complete the work in time without running counter to the statute of limitations. That is the reason.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman makes provision for payment of refund of income taxes?

Mr. MADDEN. We make provision for $12,000,000, which, of course, is a bagatelle. We have same before us; in fact, it is a matter already in our committee under a request for $42,000,000 appropriation.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That will be in the form of a deficit?

Mr. MADDEN. That will come in a deficiency bill.

Mr. HUDSPETH. When will that be passed?

Mr. MADDEN. We hope to bring it in as soon as possible. We will not delay it.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to finish this one statement, and then I will answer any questions anybody wants, if I have the time. I promised time to a number of gentlemen; and if I do not give it to them, they will feel hurt about it. I want to talk a little about the Bureau of Printing and Engraving. For nearly 40 years the utilization of the most improved type of machinery in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing has been a disputed and contested question. The legislation on the subject for the most part has been a restriction upon the most efficient administration of the plant. As early as 1886 there appeared a limitation on the appropriation to the effect that no part of the sum should be used for the purchase or operation of any new improved plate-printing presses.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to notify the gentleman from Illinois that he has used 45 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I shall take 10 minutes additional. This was followed from time to time by restrictive legislative provisions, among them being the prohibition against the repair or construction of steam plate-printing presses, and later a prohibition against the increase in the number of steam plate-printing presses. Still later a law was enacted requiring that all bonds, notes, and checks should be printed on hand-roller presses. In 1912 the permanent law now affecting the bureau was enacted. It provided, in effect, that the Secretary of the Treasury might utilize power presses for printing the backs—mind you, backs of paper money—and bonds and the fronts and backs of checks. The law also provided that in printing the backs of paper money that four subject plates should be used. It also provided that in the execution of any year's work on power presses not more than one-fifth of the hand presses should be displaced in one year. It left the printing of the faces of all paper money on hand presses from four subject plates. In 1917, after the outbreak of the war, when it was seen that the war work of the Government could not be turned out with part modern and part antiquated equipment, a law was enacted authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to utilize whatever printing presses or power presses he might desire, so long as he was able to retain in the service the same number of qualified plate printers as were engaged in the work. That is to say, it did not make any difference how much modern machinery you put in, you could not put any man out. This authority was for the period of the war with Germany.

In 1919 this authority was extended during the period of the emergency growing out of the war with Germany, with the same stipulation that in the utilization of power presses and the adoption of any improved style of printing the Secretary of the Treasury must be governed by the restriction that he must still retain the same number of permanent plate printers. So to-day we are brought face to face with the situation where the bureau is unable to proceed any further with the installation of power presses. The emergency has come to an end, and the Treasury Department will be forced to operate under the provisions of 1912, which is a permanent law. There are in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing at the present time 242 power presses and 246 hand presses. A power press can produce from three to four times more work in a day than a hand press.

A hand press requires a plate printer and one assistant, and a power press requires a plate printer and two assistants. The labor cost of printing a thousand sheets from eight-subject plates on a power press is $7.95 for the faces of the notes and $6.60 for the backs. The same labor cost per thousand sheets from four-subject plates on a hand press is $15.70 for the faces. This shows a difference of $7.22 in favor of the power press and the eight-subject plate over the hand press and the four-subject plate.

Now, there is no difference in the quality of the work performed, as the best experts in the land testify.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I can not yield until I finish this. I have not much time. I am stating the facts. If gentlemen want to be guided by the facts, they have them here.

The counterfeiting of a power-press note is no easier than of a hand-press note, so the Chief of the Secret Service testified. Most of the counterfeits are being made by photographic processes. The sole question involved here, gentlemen, is whether the Government should retain the hand presses and give employment to a larger number of plate printers and their assistants than would be used in the operation of the power presses. The installation of 58 power presses will do away with the utilization of 196 hand presses. Two employees to each of the 196 hand presses requires 392 employees; 3 employees to each of the 58 power presses requires 174 employees. The difference between 392 and 174 gives a reduction of 218 persons under the power-press plan. But it will be even more than that. The committee has recommended the installation of 58 power presses and the displacement of 196 hand presses. In order that the power presses may be fully utilized it also recommends authority to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to utilize the printing plates that carry more than four subjects each.

At the present time under the temporary law only 40 power presses are engaged in printing the backs of the United States currency from eight-subject plates and 23 presses are engaged in printing the faces on the eight-subject plates. All the remainder of the 175 power presses are printing from four-subject plates, notwithstanding the fact that 80 per cent more work can be produced in a day on an eight-subject plate press than is produced on a four-subject plate press.

There is no difference in the quality of the work produced from the eight-subject plates and the four-subject plates. The utilization of eight-subject plates will further reduce the number of employees below the 218 stated in the bill. The plan which the committee recommends shows an immediate economy in its operation.

There has been provided in the bill the sum of $355,000 for the purchase and installation of 58 power presses. It is expected that this will be accomplished by June 30, 1923, if the item is included in the bill. There have been reductions on account of the plan recommended as follows: From the appropriation for pay of plate printers and assistants we recommend the reduction of $746,555, and from the appropriation for pay of other employees $50,000, or a total reduction of $796,555. Then we add $355,000 for the purchase of presses. We deduct that from the other sum, and it leaves you a net reduction of $441,000. While the net reduction shown here is only a little more than $400,000 for 1924 it will be seen that in the ensuing years, after the presses have been paid for, there will be anywhere from $800,000 to $1,000,000 annual saving in the conduct of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed the allotted time.

Mr. MADDEN. I will take five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman takes five minutes more.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, if the provision which the committee recommends is not retained in the bill I shall be compelled to offer amendments restoring to the bill the amounts above stated, because the reductions have only been made on the condition that the provision in the bill is to be adopted.

The committee does not present any new, untried plan. Half of the presses of the bureau are now power presses. Their capacity and efficiency have been long tried and established. Much of the Government's money in the past few years has been printed, front and back, from eight-subject plates. This method of printing has been proven efficient. The sole question in what the committee proposes, stripped of all other considerations, is whether or not the House is willing to place the Bureau of Engraving and Printing upon a basis that will permit it to operate at an annual cost of anywhere from $800,000 to $1,000,000 less than it is now costing. Even though it may mean the elimination from the pay roll of that bureau of several hundred worthy employees, should there be any hesitation about the proper thing to do in the interest of the taxpayers of the country?

I do not think so, and I would consider myself criminally negligent if I knew the facts that I have stated to you and did not present the case to the House for its consideration. [Applause.] I know it is not popular, but I do not care whether it is popular or unpopular in any department of the Government [applause], or whether I am here one day or one year. [Applause.] Wherever I find anything in a department, any practice that ought not to exist and for which the taxpayers of the Nation are paying without justification, I will present the case to you for your decision. That is what I am doing here to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And the evidence on page 323 shows that this one item alone ultimately is going to save $1,377,000 a year.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; that is right.

Now, as I said, the whole subject that is with us here is, Should there be any hesitation about the proper thing to do in the interest of the taxpayers of the country, who are insisting that the Government business should be placed upon the most efficient basis? To say to the Secretary of the Treasury that he shall operate half the power presses and half the hand presses is about equivalent to saying to the head of any other department, "Mr. Secretary, you must operate half of your forces making your reports in longhand writing, while the other half is to be employed in operating typewriters."

That is what it means. Gentlemen, the responsibility is ours. We may hurt somebody in dispensing with their services, and I am the last man in the world who would try to do an injury to any man; but we have an obligation here. We are under oath to do our duty, and our duty is clear. [Applause.]

We do not hesitate to put the employees out of other departments. We are demanding a reduction in the forces everywhere. Now, the question arises, What is there peculiarly holy about this particular department that justifies the continuation of a practice there that exists nowhere else? If there is anybody here who wants to assume the responsibility of keeping the present antiquated methods in vogue, I have done my duty when I present the case to you. It is now in your hands. I leave it in your keeping. You can do your duty as you see it. I have done mine as I conceived it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] is recognized for one hour. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to enter at this time upon any discussion of the pending bill. I shall probably have something to say about some of its provisions when we read it under the five-minute rule. I do want to submit very briefly some remarks with reference to the Budget that has been presented to Congress by the President for the year 1924. I shall do so in a very general way at this time because, frankly, I have not had an opportunity to analyze closely the many thousand items and the various details and provisions contained in this immense Budget. I was away from the House and from Washington on Monday when it was sent to Congress, being absent on a mission of the House, and I only secured a copy of it within the last 36 hours, and on account of other official duties have not had opportunity to closely analyze it, as I expect to do later. What I shall say will not be said in a partisan spirit. The Budget law was not a partisan bill. It was favored by both Republicans and Democrats and was put through Congress practically unanimously.

Everyone in the House, of course, wishes to see the Budget system perfected and to see it accomplish what it was intended to accomplish in the way of a great saving and economy to the people. Constructive criticism will prove helpful in its administration and should be welcomed by those who wish for its fullest success. I have no criticism of the new Director of the Budget, Gen. H. M. Lord, who, in my judgment, is one of the most efficient and clever gentlemen it has been my good fortune to know. He is a man of wide experience and great energy, and has undoubtedly devoted his untiring time and attention to the preparation of this Budget. Of course, General Lord is under limitations, because he acts only as the business representative or business agent, so to speak, of the President. He can initiate no independent policies of his own, but must carry out, as he should, the policies of the President, who appointed him.

Neither would I detract from the President of the United States, whom the chairman of the committee [Mr. MADDEN] declared to be the first President who has ever given any time or attention or study to Budget details. In view of some of the statements contained in his message transmitting the Budget, I have wondered just how much time he gave to the study of its details. I submit that he is the first President upon whom was ever devolved specifically by law the plain duty to give attention to the details of the Budget. Before the Budget law was passed there was no responsibility whatsoever resting upon the President of the United States with reference to it, and gentlemen who were here and voted for that law will recall that that was the chief argument in its support; that is, that it imposed a personal responsibility upon the President of the United States in the transmission of the estimates for appropriations. I submit, gentlemen, that a very cursory analysis of this Budget will show that when you eliminate those appropriations which were made for this fiscal year 1923 for activities which everyone knew would not be required next year, the estimates for appropriations for 1924 exceed the appropriations for 1923, and the same is true of the estimated expenditures for 1923–24, and it is my purpose to demonstrate the truth of this statement by an actual citation of the figures.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Before the gentleman does that may I interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I take pleasure in yielding to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I approved the enactment of the Budget law and voted for it, just as I think the gentleman did. But my attention is called to this fact, that ordinarily the Budget estimates are reduced by the Committee on Appropriations, and I think the action of the committee is generally followed by Congress. Now, that being true, what does the gentleman think is the practical value of the operation of the Budget system? If there were no Bureau of the Budget sending in estimates, does the gentleman think that the Committee on Appropriations would do differently from what it now commonly does in reaching its conclusions and reporting the appropriation bills? Or does the work of the Bureau of the Budget serve in some very valuable way to guide or direct the action of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that I think it does. General Lord in a hearing before the Committee on Appropriations this morning stated, if I am correct in my recollection, that the Budget Bureau had reduced the estimates submitted to him as director in the sum of $180,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Three hundred million dollars from the first or preliminary estimates and $180,000,000 from the last.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Three hundred million dollars from the first or preliminary estimates and $180,000,000 when they were finally made up and transmitted to Congress, and the gentleman from Virginia can readily see that that has not only saved the committee a great deal of work in the effort to eliminate that immense sum of money and to get at an actual proper basis for appropriations, but that possibly Congress might have overlooked some of the reductions that General Lord with his large force was enabled to make.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Was or was not the Committee on Appropriations usually in the habit of cutting the departmental estimates just about in the same way in which the Bureau of the Budget now cuts those estimates before it transmits them to Congress?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true, and an examination of the appropriations during all of the past years will show that. There may be a question raised by some as to whether it was done as scientifically as it is done by the Budget Bureau, because the gentleman will appreciate the fact that naturally the Bureau of the Budget, with a force costing $150,000 a year and with numerous experts and accountants who are continually on this service from month to month through the entire fiscal year, is better able to scientifically eliminate excessive appropriations where there is a disposition to eliminate them than a committee which sits here and must depend upon sending for bureau heads and other officials connected with the Government for the information sought. And right in that connection I want to refer to the President's message on the Budget and to this particular language. He says:

> We now come to the estimates of appropriations for 1924, amounting to $3,078,940,331.69. This is $195,298,359.14 less than the appropriations already made for the current fiscal year, 1923. Early in July I called together in open meeting for the third time the executives constituting the business establishment of the Government and at that time further emphasized the need of more rigid economy in the expenditure of public funds. I stated that the estimated receipts for the fiscal year 1924 would not permit so liberal appropriations for that year as had been made for the current fiscal year, 1923. The preparation of the estimates of appropriations as they appear in the Budget was controlled by this policy.

Now, listen:

> While it may be possible to make a small reduction in an item here and there, any material reduction will necessitate a change in the administrative policy upon which estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1924 are based.

I do not know whether the President intended by that language to say to Congress that it should not reduce these estimates or not. I do know that many of the eastern papers construed it as a declaration on the part of the President to Congress that the administration would very earnestly disapprove any action of Congress in reducing the estimates submitted by him to Congress. If that was the purpose of the President, I think acquiescence in it would be most unfortunate. Even this bill has reduced the estimates over $3,000,000, and I take it that other bills, where it will be possible to make larger reductions, where charges are not fixed, as they are in this bill, will make greater reductions. If we ever get to the point where Congress, on account of the passage of this Budget law, permits the President, through the Director of the Budget, to make up the appropriations for Congress and the country, it will prove to be very unfortunate that the Budget system was ever adopted. And I say this as one who was a member of the select committee which framed the Budget law.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Apropos to what the gentleman is saying, what did the Budget say or recommend as to the change in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing? Did they recommend this change?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think so.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That was done by the committee?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That was done by the committee. Let me say that I was not here when the hearings on this bill were had, having been detained at home by illness in my family, but I do not think there was any recommendation by the Budget Bureau on that point.

Now, I stated a moment ago that, if you eliminate from the 1923 appropriations those appropriations which everyone knew would not be necessary to carry for 1924, the appropriations asked for 1924 will exceed those of 1923.

I wish to say again that I am only making this statement for the purpose of giving to the country what I believe to be the facts. I think the time has come when we should quit camouflaging on appropriations made by Congress. The Director of the Budget and Congress camouflaged for the past two years in the effort to make the people believe that some real economy was being effected, but I think we ought to tell the country the real truth. The people are entitled to the facts about the appropriations and the administration, and Congress ought to quit hedging in the effort to cover them up.

What are the facts? The President commented with some degree of pride on the fact that the estimates for 1924 are $195,298,359.14 less than the appropriations for 1923, and he made the statement that this was made possible by economies and savings brought about by him. Let us see if that is true. That excludes the Postal Service. If you include the Postal Service, it will make a difference of $169,656,934.14. I wish to say here that although it has been the custom of Congress, both Democratic and Republican, for years, I have never been able to understand why in submitting the estimates and discussing the appropriations the Postal Service is always excluded. I know that we derive the revenue that is spent for the Postal Service from that service. But it has always seemed to me that there ought to be estimates made to Congress of the entire money necessary to run the Government, and that the cost of the Postal Service should be included, the money derived therefrom being at the same time counted as a part of the general receipts instead of balancing the expenditures off with the receipts.

I want to call attention to the fact that in the estimates submitted it is stated that in 1924 the Government will expend $12,250,000 for reclamation purposes, as against $14,800,000 which was appropriated in the fiscal year 1923. That is a difference of $2,550,000. Yet the Budget, instead of estimating the full amount of $12,250,000, deducted from that sum $7,500,000, which it is estimated will be secured from rentals, and so forth, and only estimates for $4,750,000, thus creating a false balance in its favor for 1924 over 1923 of $10,050,000.

In addition to that, in the Navy authority is asked to use $23,200,000 in the naval supply account fund for the purchase of materials and as cash, and that should have been included in the estimates in order to show the full facts. These two items if allowed aggregate $33,250,000, which should have been added to the estimate and which would have brought the above figures down to $162,000,000, or, including the Postal Service, down to $136,000,000.

But I want to call attention to the further fact that the estimates for the year 1924 do not include $150,000,000 interest appropriated in 1923. In other words, we appropriated for 1923 $1,100,000 to take care of the interest on the public debt and $125,000,000 accrued discount on war-savings certificates. This year we are asked to appropriate only $950,000,000. So, as a matter of fact, we are asked to appropriate for 1924 $150,000,000 less in interest, and certainly the administration and the Budget Bureau is not entitled to take credit for that as a saving to the people of the United States. And yet that sum of $150,000,000 is included in the statement that the President made, that it was $195,000,000 less than the appropriation for 1923.

But that is not all of the story. The appropriations for 1923 carry increased compensation or what is commonly called the bonus, which it is estimated will cost $38,000,000, that is not estimated for in 1924. I do not know whether Congress will allow it or not, but certainly it should be taken into consideration when you compare the estimates of 1924 with the appropriations for 1923. I have heard it stated that the bonus will be passed for the next fiscal year unless the reclassification bill goes through the Senate, and that seems unlikely, in the opinion of some. Whether it was left out of the estimates because there is no statute for it, or whether it was left out with the idea that Congress would appropriate it anyway, and therefore it was not necessary to include it in the estimate, I do not know. I can see how its omission has helped to swell the figures which are claimed to show reduction in ordinary expenditures.

When you add that $38,000,000 to the $150,000,000 you have $188,000,000. But that is not all. The estimates for 1924 reduced the 1923 appropriations for military and naval compensation by forty-two million and odd dollars. Certainly the administration is not entitled to credit for the $42,000,000 as a saving to the people of the United States. It is due to a reduction in the Army and the fact that we are getting further away from the war, and not to any saving on the part of the President or the Bureau of the Budget or the Congress or any other governmental agency.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course the attitude of the administration was one of intense opposition to the reduction in the size of the Army?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. At the time when Congress forced the reduction?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. For which now credit seems to be sought.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is clearly correct. If the administration had had its way with reference to the size of the Army and the Navy, we would not have had any such reduction as they are now taking credit for, as the gentleman from Tennessee so well suggests. So when you analyze the estimates submitted for 1924, even in this cursory way, you will find that eliminating only those three appropriations for 1923, for which the administration can take no credit, the estimates for 1924 exceeded the appropriations made for 1923 by $94,000,000. A close analysis of the Budget will show other items which will add to this sum.

In addition to that, I call attention to the fact that this bill makes immediately available certain sums—for instance, $200,000 for the customs service—and the Budget Director has submitted several provisions making the funds appropriated for 1924 immediately available upon the passage of the act. I think something like $24,000,000 are made immediately available for the Pension Bureau. I think that is a bad precedent. I think it is bad policy, and I so stated to the director this morning in a hearing which we had. The passage of the Budget law—the division of all these appropriations by departments—was intended to give the people of the country an exact picture of the appropriations made, and if there are to be deficiencies for 1923 of $24,000,000 in the Pension Bureau, if there are to be deficiencies of $200,000 in the customs service, if there are to be deficiencies in the Coast Guard they ought not to be taken care of by making the appropriations for 1924 immediately available, but they ought to be appropriated for in a direct way through a deficiency bill, so that every Member of Congress and the people of the country will know what is being done, because when you make a 1924 appropriation immediately available for expenses in 1923, necessarily you will have to make a still larger appropriation in 1925 for 1924 unless you swell the appropriations for 1924 beyond their proper level.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman would admit, however, that a case like that on page 85, of an appropriation for power presses should be made immediately available? In fact, is it not necessary that they may be installed in time to effect the savings?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There might be some justification for that, but there is no reason why a deficiency bill could not be proposed and passed carrying an appropriation for that purpose. There can certainly be no sort of justification for making immediately available a fund in the Pension Bureau or in the Customs Service or in the Coast Guard and other services.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. I understood the gentleman to say that the payment of interest was $150,000,000 less, or will be that much less for 1924.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; I said the appropriation would be $150,000,000 less.

Mr. LONDON. For the payment of interest?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. The public debt has been reduced only $1,000,0000,000. How does the statement of $150,000,000 saved in interest accord with that statement?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That includes the accrued discounts on war-savings certificates issued in 1918.

Mr. LONDON. That is a part of the public debt.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true; but they became payable on January 1 of this year. I think they were sold originally for $4.20, but they will be cashed on the 1st of January for $5, and it will take $125,000,000 to pay them.

Mr. LONDON. But the $125,000,000 will go to the payment of principal indebtedness.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; on January 1.

Mr. LONDON. So that $150,000,000 does not represent interest alone?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; it represents interest and a part of the debt. I have discussed the question of Budget estimates, and I want now to hurry along.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, right there, before the gentleman leaves that question, can he tell us, if he knows, whether or not it was known to this department and its heads that this deficit of $24,000,000 existed several months ago, and that he would require an appropriation in a deficiency?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean in the Pension Bureau?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know just when it was discovered.

Mr. BLANTON. It has been known for some time, has it not?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The estimates were required to be placed in the hands of the Budget Director on October 1.

Mr. BLANTON. And he knew that he would run short at least $24,000,000 unless it were allowed in the deficiency?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I assume that is true.

Mr. BLANTON. Should not that have been included?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. He knows it now, at any rate, and, of course, we will be in session for three months, and an estimate could be submitted as a deficiency in time between now and March to take care of it.

Mr. BLANTON. I am with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] on the proposed saving of at least $750,000 on this power-press item, but I am wondering whether or not the gentleman had the consent of the Chief Executive in that proposition, or whether it might be later denominated a "fiasco," as was the gentleman's other amendment on the shipping bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can not inform the gentleman as to the position of the President on the proposition. Now, just a word as to the estimated expenditures for 1923 as compared with 1924. The President estimates total expenditures for 1923 at $3,703,801,671. The total expenditures for 1924 are $3,190,843,234. This, you will bear in mind, excludes the Postal Service. If you add the Postal Service, then the expenditures for 1923 are estimated to be $4,232,205,942, while those for 1924 are $3,765,496,386. The ordinary expenditures for 1923 are $2,240,329,871, while those for 1924 are $1,849,129,234. That is exclusive of the Postal Service and permanent appropriations. The difference between the expenditures of 1923 and 1924, exclusive of the Postal Service, is estimated to be $322,958,487, while if you include the Postal Service the difference is $466,709,566, and that is claimed to have been brought about by a saving or economy upon the part of the administration under the Budget system. Let us see if this is true. The excess of expenditures in 1923 over 1924 in the Federal control of railroads, the payment of standard contracts made with the railroads during the war, is $116,000,000. Certainly the administration and no other official is entitled to take credit for this difference of $116,000,000 as a saving or an economy in departmental policies. It simply means that these contracts, having been settled in 1923, will not be a charge on the Government in 1924. In the transportation act, in the payment of guaranties, and so forth, there will be paid this year $51,548,447 more than will be paid in 1924. In military and naval compensation, $5,000,000 more in 1923 than 1924. In vocational rehabilitation, $20,000,000 more in 1923 than 1924. We know, of course, that as we get further from the war the expense of vocational rehabilitation will decrease, not by reason of any economy effected by the Government, but by reason of the less number of persons who are to be rehabilitated.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. LONDON. What are the guaranties under the transportation act to which the gentleman referred?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Of the 6 per cent guaranteed to the railroads and allowances.

Mr. LONDON. That is the provision?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In the Esch-Cummins law.

Mr. LONDON. In existing law?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; the Esch-Cummins law, which is now on the statute books.

Mr. LONDON. I understand no guaranties are being paid now.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This sum is to be paid this year, I will say to the gentleman, and includes advances, guaranties, and reimbursements. No such payments are required in 1924. Hospital facilities, $1,000,000 excess this year over next year; hospital service, $18,960,171. Naturally, as we will be further from the war there will be a less number of patients in the hospitals next year than this year and it will cost less money. The expenditures for Army pensions in 1923 will exceed those of 1924 by $25,000,000, due, of course, to the fact that the pension roll is decreasing on account of death, and not to any saving or economy on the part of the administration. Alaskan Railroad, they will spend $1,300,000 more in 1923 than 1924, when I understand it is to be completed. Navy public works, $9,509,500 more will be spent in 1923 than 1924 on work which will be completed. I am not referring to new projects estimated in the Budget, but I am talking about work under way. In addition to that, customs drawbacks, they estimate, will be $15,000,000 less in 1924 than in 1923. Refund of taxes, $87,112,000 more this year than will be expended in 1924. Public works, post offices, and hospitals, $11,133,250 more in 1923 than 1924. Loans to railroads—we will loan this year, according to the estimates, $23,000,000; nothing next year. Increased compensation this year will be $38,000,000. Whether Congress will make an appropriation for 1924 I do not know.

If you add to these sums the interest of $150,000,000 spent this year in excess of the amount required in 1924 you have a total of $572,558,768, as against a difference of expenditure exclusive of Postal Service in 1923–24 of $522,958,487, or a total expenditure of $466,000,000, and I repeat when you eliminate from this Budget those items which are necessarily eliminated, because we are either further from the war or because they are activities which cease during this year, there are not only no such saving and no such reduction as was indicated in the figures submitted by the President, but there is an actual increase by many millions in the expenditures of 1924 as compared with 1923. I wish to say again that the administration and Congress ought to quit this camouflaging in the effort to mislead the people into the belief that great savings are being made. They should be frank with the people and let them know the full truth in regard to the expenditure of their money.

Now, in conclusion I want to call attention to another fact. The Budget Bureau and the President in their desire to reduce the estimates have reduced the estimates for rivers and harbors from the appropriation made in 1923 by $15,000,000.

That is carried in the War Department bill. In other words, the Budget Bureau has increased the estimated expenditures of military activities in the War Department in the sum of $10,134,123. They propose to spend that much more money for strictly military purposes in 1924 than in 1923, but at the same time, in the same department, they have reduced the nonmilitary activities, including the improvement of waterways and the harbors of the country. Likewise they have reduced the estimates for road improvements to $30,000,000, notwithstanding the fact that Congress authorized the expenditure of $65,000,000 in 1924. When it comes to serving the taxpayer and giving the taxpayers who pay the money into the Treasury some benefit from the appropriations we find that the estimates for appropriations to be made in the interest of the business of the country and the taxpayers of the country have been reduced, whereas those not strictly in their interest have been increased.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. It seems to be the continual contention of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] that the estimates made by the Budget can not be reduced by Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. BLANTON. Does he contend they should be reduced?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. On the contrary, simply that they are reduced.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I hope the time will never come when Congress will not keep its hands on them.

Mr. BLANTON. I understood here in the debates from time to time that the gentleman from Virginia held that the Congress should not attempt to reduce the estimates made by the Budget.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. No. I will say to the gentleman that there have been items considered here where proposed reductions were made in the estimates sent down by the Budget Bureau, and for reasons based on facts that appeared to me I contended that those reductions should not be made; but I would not for a moment lay down a general rule.

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad the gentleman puts it that way, because I have always thought it should be the rule for the Budget to establish a maximum beyond which Congress could not go, but that Congress might hew below that maximum as much as possible.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Congress has never intended to take—and I hope it never will take—its hands off the Budget or permit the Budget Bureau or any other department of the Government to lay down its estimates and have Congress accept them without question.

Mr. BLANTON. Otherwise we would be simply "passing the buck"?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Gentlemen, as I have been showing, there must be a considerable reduction in the expenses of the Government to permit a reduction of taxation, which the people expect——

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. When the gentleman finds that they have cut below, as in the case of waterways, does he not believe their figures should be increased?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think Congress should have the right to increase as well as to reduce; but in most cases the interests of the people would be best subserved by reduction.

Mr. LAZARO. But in certain cases the interests of the people will be served by going above the estimates of the Budget. For instance, in the improvement of the waterways we have gone above once before, and I hope we shall go above this time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I heartily approve what the President has said in his message, that Congress must be more careful in the passage of legislation which will involve extra expenditures of money. If it is not, then we can never expect to see a reduction in the cost of government.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I would like to have the gentleman's view, as representing the views of the minority, on this Bureau of Engraving and Printing matter. Does the gentleman agree with the chairman of the committee [Mr. MADDEN]?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I speak not for the minority, but for myself alone.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Do you personally agree with him?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was not present at the hearings, owing to illness in my family, but I understand that what is involved in that proposition is simply the question of whether or not the Government will dispense with 218 employees who are not needed or whether it will retain them at an expense of between $750,000 and $800,000, and perhaps more, every year.

And certainly it seems to me that when the proposition is viewed in the interest of the taxpayers and an overburdened Treasury, no Member of Congress can afford not to subscribe to the action of the committee in this matter. Heretofore objections have been made to it, and Members possibly voted against it on the theory and on the ground that the printing of the notes by power presses would give rise to increased counterfeiting and make counterfeiting easy. But when experts come before Congress, when the Chief of the Secret Service, who has charge of the enforcement of the law against counterfeiting, tells the Congress and the committee that it will not have that effect, that it will not make counterfeiting any easier, then, of course, those who oppose the proposition are robbed of the reason, which has been pleaded so effectively heretofore. The only proposition now is whether or not we will dispense with 218 employees who, the department says, are not needed, and save to the taxpayers $800,000 annually. It seems to me there can be but one answer to the question. We read in the newspapers a few days ago that several thousand typewriters and stenographers and other employees were to be dispensed with in the Veterans' Bureau shortly. I think that appeared in the morning papers a few days ago. What reason can be advanced——

Mr. MADDEN. Under this bill the services of over 500 people in the Public Debt Service are dispensed with.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. This bill, as the gentleman from Illinois correctly says, dispenses with the services of more than 500 employees in the Public Debt Service.

Now, how can a man be consistent in voting to dispense with their services and at the same time decline to vote to dispense with the services of employees in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, or of any other department of this Government, when it is made clear to everyone that their services can be dispensed with without injury to the Government?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Personally I do not think you can decline, if their work is just as good.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We must take the word of those in charge of the work. The director and everybody who has testified has stated that the work can be done just as effectively.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I understand the gentleman to say that the net saving would be $800,000 a year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is stated that it will be $800,000 a year at least.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. It will be that after you have marked off the cost of the presses?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, yes. The presses are provided for in this bill. They cost $5,000 apiece; 58 presses. That will be the initial cost. That will be about $300,000. If you save $800,000 a year, you will save $500,000 of that sum the first year and have the presses for future use.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a question for information?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. I have heard it said that if this change is made there will be more danger of the country being flooded with counterfeit money. Has the gentleman given any thought to that matter?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was not present at the hearing and did not get the opportunity to go into it fully myself, but that was gone into by the subcommittee that had charge of the hearing; and the Chief of the Secret Service, Mr. Moran, stated that it would not make counterfeiting any easier; that as a matter of fact counterfeiting is now done by photography; and that it is as easy to photograph a note or bill printed on a hand press as it is one printed on a power press; that it will not affect the number of counterfeits in the least. That is the opinion of the expert who for years has had charge of the enforcement of the law against counterfeiting in the United States, and I have full confidence in him and his opinion.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman know whether hand presses are used in the printing of money in any other country or by any commercial firm?

Mr. MADDEN. The American Bank Note Co. uses power presses, and that company uses power presses for printing jobs that require many more than eight subjects, the largest number required in the printing of our paper currency.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. They print money for a great many different countries.

Mr. MADDEN. For a great many other countries in the world, and I will say to the gentleman that they have applied for the privilege of bidding on the printing of the Federal reserve notes, and the Treasury has the power to let the contract to them, and if by any chance they should get the contract because we are not able to meet the prices that they can make, that one thing alone would throw 1,100 people out of employment in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. So they had better let us modernize the place and keep the people that we can keep there and not have some outside concern come in and close up the shop.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Has the gentleman heard that the American Bankers' Association, representing 11,500 bankers, at their annual convention a few weeks ago passed a resolution asking that we return to the method of production or our currency in use prior to the war? Is it not a fact that the bankers of the country are vitally interested in this question because bankers, more than any other class of business men, are the persons who detect the counterfeit issues put in circulation?

Does the gentleman know whether or not in good faith the bankers' association passed such a resolution, are they experts as to paper money, and are they qualified to testify as to what is necessary in keeping up the quality of the currency of the country, and thus protecting the people from loss through the activities of counterfeiters?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have not heard of the action of the bankers' association, but during the war, as the gentleman knows, we were using cotton as the material for our paper money because we could not get linen. Cotton is objectionable for many reasons, but now we are using three-quarters linen, I think. Is not that correct?

Mr. MADDEN. Three-quarters linen.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And it is expected that in a very short while we will be using practically all linen as the material for our paper money. I have not heard of the action of the bankers' association. But if the gentleman refers to a fear that this money may be more easily counterfeited, I will say to him as I have said a couple of times heretofore that the man who is in charge of the enforcement of the law against counterfeiting states positively that it will make no difference whatsoever.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. I have a copy of their resolution.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Without being an expert on the subject, I should think it is much more easy to counterfeit money made out of cotton material than it is money made out of linen material.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Then it seems to be the opinion of my colleague that the resolution of the bankers' association was directed more to the quality of the paper than the methods of engraving and printing?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, yes; because there has been no change up to this time in the method of printing or engraving currency. That matter is being corrected just as rapidly as possible, because, as I said to the gentleman a while ago, during the war the Government was necessarily compelled to make its money out of cotton material. Now it is returning to the linen and is already using three-fourths linen. So I think the objections or criticisms, or whatever you choose to call them, of the bankers' association are being met by the Government.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Did the committee give an opportunity to those interested in the question to present fully the facts as to whether or not the hand presses cause the production of a more sharply printed surface, which makes counterfeiting more easily detected than when the flat surface given by the power press is used?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was not present at the hearings, on account of illness in my family, but I know that very full hearings were had, and that everybody who wanted to appear before the committee was permitted to do so, as they always are permitted to appear. Nobody, I feel sure, was shut out or prevented from making any statement which he desired to make.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Is it not a fact that the opinion of the head of our Secret Service is based upon a very wide experience, and that any counterfeiting that took place would finally be reported to him? Therefore can we get any higher authority to advise us in this matter than the head of the Secret Service?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think there is any better authority, and for my part I am willing to accept his judgment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the floor. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE].

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I have got in front of these contrivances, because I think they are a consummate nuisance in the House. [Applause.] In talking out of doors to people several blocks away they are probably all right, but here in the pit of the Hall of the House, in this famous forum, where men look each other in the face when engaged in bitter and partisan debate, I like to hear the voice as nature created it, unfalsettoed by mechanical devices. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the pending bill carries an appropriation of $9,000,000 for the enforcement of prohibition, $250,000 less than the appropriation for this fiscal year. My brief remarks will raise only one point—the rights of the people under the eighteenth amendment. Existing conditions are so intolerable, disrespect, defiance, and violation of law so prevalent and insistent, so threatening to our institutions, so endangering to the perpetuity of the Republic, that I feel it my duty to express my views. I have always stood for temperance and against intemperance. I hold no brief for "drys" or "wets." I hold a brief only for my country.

I am sworn to uphold and enforce the Constitution and the laws of the United States, and while I remain a Member of the House, regardless of my personal views, I will faithfully live up to my oath of office. During my years of service in the House I have voted at every opportunity to give to the people their full constitutional rights, and while I remain a Member of the House I shall continue to do so.

Those favoring the eighteenth amendment contended that it was necessary to amend the Federal Constitution to bring about and to enforce prohibition in this country. When the amendment was adopted the Congress proceeded to attempt to enforce prohibition through legislative action, disregardful of the letter and the spirit of the amendment. The flat of the Congress was substituted for the authority of the Constitution.

The enforcement act is practically bone dry. The eighteenth amendment is not. The amendment, amongst other things, prohibits "the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within * * * the United States * * * for beverage purposes." It is apparent that the people are entitled to a beverage containing any alcoholic content that is reasonably nonintoxicating. The law should be based upon reason, and reason should also prevail in permitting the use of alcohol for scientific and business purposes and in permitting the use of liquors under prescription from physicians. I think that the Judiciary Committee of the House, and I refer to that great committee only because under the rules of the House it has jurisdiction in the premises, should reasonably determine upon competent and expert evidence the maximum alcoholic content permitted under the amendment and make available the evidence sustaining its finding in order that Members of the House not on the Judiciary Committee may be able to determine for themselves the reasonableness thereof. This finding of fact is solely the duty of the Congress.

I have examined the opinions of the Supreme Court upon matters arising from prohibition legislation and I find nothing therein contrary to this view. It is not to be presumed that this great tribunal would disturb such a finding of fact honestly, conscientiously, and reasonably found by the Congress and based upon competent and sufficient evidence to sustain the same. Of course, the power of the Congress in this respect is not unlimited. A finding of fact not based upon sufficient evidence might well be held to raise a question of law. In Two hundred and fifty-first United States, 220, the court said: "We can not say, as a matter of law, that a beverage containing not more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol is intoxicating."

In determining the maximum we must bear in mind that there exists for our consideration not a war-time power involving the defense and preservation of the Nation, but a constitutional power involving the rights of the people in time of peace. Then, I think, the Congress should provide that each State may determine in its own way, by legislative action or by referendum, what alcoholic content not exceeding such maximum a beverage manufactured and sold within the State may contain. If Minnesota wants cold water, let her have it. [Applause.] If New York wants the maximum, no other sovereign State could reasonably object. [Applause.] This would be not only reasonable but just and equitable, inasmuch as the eighteenth amendment gives to the several States concurrent power to enforce prohibition. We can render no better service than to do all that lies within our power to command respect for and obedience to the Federal Government, the bulwark of our institutions.

The phrase "beer and light wines," while seductive, is meaningless under the Constitution. The question is purely one of alcoholic content. The Congress has no power and should not attempt to nullify the Constitution. The manufacture and sale of beer and light wines, or either, must be incidental to the maximum alcoholic content permissible under the eighteenth amendment.

Two objections are frequently made against liberalizing the enforcement act. One objection is that it will mean the restoration of the saloon. The answer is the elimination of the saloon through Federal enactment. The other is that it will mean an entering wedge for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. This objection lacks force. As thirteen States can block repeal, it can reasonably be presumed that the eighteenth amendment is in the Constitution to stay. However, any excuse for denying to the people their constitutional rights is untenable and indefensible.

The granting of such rights would probably result in a beverage, at a reasonable price, manufactured from pure ingredients under governmental inspection, and sold only in the places and in the manner prescribed by the Government; in greatly reduced appropriations for the enforcement of prohibition; in increased Treasury receipts of more than a half billion dollars a year, not exacted from overburdened taxpayers but cheerfully paid by citizens in the exercise of their constitutional rights; in the elimination of the production and consumption of poisonous and deadly concoctions; and, above and beyond all, in the restoration of a wholesome respect for law and the Constitution and in public cooperation in the upholding and enforcement thereof.

Let us have the courage, the courage that knows no fear, the courage that obliterates self, the courage of the men who have made this Nation great, to grant unto the people the rights guaranteed to them under their Constitution. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I think it a source of regret that such a competent, able, likable Member as our friend from Texas gives such a presentation as he does once in a while, and it is a rather difficult thing for us to maintain our equilibrium and our respect for him when he speaks as he has just spoken. While he amuses himself about our situation at Lausanne he ought not to overlook the fact that the United States is leading that conference just now, and the one person to whom the world listens more than to anyone else over there is the American representative, because he speaks his country's judgment, unhindered by any commitment by European decision. But that is not what I intended to say. I wish that the membership of the House would take time to examine the last report of the Secretary of the Treasury with special reference to certain facts—the refund of the debt, on pages 3 to 9; the economy in Government expenditure, pages 10 to 11; the argument on the tax-exempt securities, on page 13; the domestic-credit situation, which, in my judgment, is a very wonderful statement of a remarkable achievement, on page 32; the War Finance Corporation and its operations, on page 37; the agricultural credit situation, on page 40. Those are some of the leading items of interest to the country just now, and they are wonderfully set out.

When the historian details the after-war problems and their solution, special commendation will be made of the brilliant financing of the Government obligations. Measured by the size of the problem, its complications, its possible dire results, its difficulties to overcome, the success of the Treasury Department, while not spectacular, is the most brilliant since the days of Alexander Hamilton.

The present Secretary of the Treasury found a public debt of February 28, 1921, $24,049,527,788.58. Of this amount nearly three billion was unfunded or floating, representing borrowings from banks on short term. Here were liquid assets representing at least seven billion commercial credit, tied up by a Government policy of financing from hand to mouth; credits frozen and prevented from flowing into productive industry, the results of which was industrial depression from want of liquid capital.

The first step of the present policy was to thaw out these credits, release the assets of the banks for commercial purposes by inviting the investing public to absorb the credits rather than compelling the banks to take the obligation. Interest rates were ranging high, rediscount rates reached 7 per cent, and Liberty bonds had gone, some of them, as low as $81.7. When first offered the rates were 5½. To-day these obligations cost the Government only 4¼, saving to the Government 1¼ per cent. Money thus became easier, interest rates to the public began to fall, investments increased, industry at once revived, and unemployment began to disappear. An examination shows that call money fell from 6 to 4 per cent, and bankers' acceptances of 60 to 90 days fell as low as 3 per cent June of this year. Rediscount rates fell from 7 to 4 per cent, or almost 50 per cent.

The general effect of this financing brought the Government's credit from the low point to par, and in several cases to a premium. It is estimated that here alone the appreciation amounts to not less than $2,500,000,000 to the holders.

This remarkable showing was due to the employment of sound business financing in which the Treasury made possible the disposition of securities on an investment basis with a view of their distribution among real investors rather than the banks. By this method the Treasury has been able to undertake the most stupendous refunding operation to handle the seven billions of Government obligations due in 1923.

On June 30, 1921, there were at least $7,000,000,000 due within two years, including $4,000,000,000 in Victory notes, $2,500,000,000 Treasury certificates, and $656,000,000 war-savings stamps. During the fiscal year at least $1,000,000,000 were retired or paid off. To refund the $6,000,000,000 remaining without business disturbance was the problem.

To-day all this enormous amount except $1,658,000,000 have been refunded, and within a short time this amount will be reduced to $715,000,000. All this has been accomplished so successfully in a way that business has not felt the strain, and only those who watch the current of Government financing were aware of the achievement. The obligations were so placed as to avoid embarrassing industry and permitting the Government to meet them when due without further strain either of the taxing power or the money market.

The danger of a deficit of $650,000,000, not including the $125,000,000 interest on war-savings stamps, will fade if the policy of economy continues. With the receipts of $225,000,000 interest on foreign debts, $300,000,000 of back taxes collected, $125,000,000 from the liquidation of the War Finance Corporation, and $115,000,000 estimated additional customs revenue from the Fordney Tariff Act the deficit will be most probably wiped out.

This Nation has balanced its budget, reduced its public debt by over $1,231,102,975.41, financed its loans, thawed out its frozen credits, released its assets for industry, made banking easier, lowered rates of interest and rediscounts, revived business, banished unemployment, and brought the Government credit back to par. This achievement will challenge the record for an equal performance in the history of finance. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. May I have some more time?

Mr. MADDEN. I am sorry I have no more time left.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the balance of this statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Unless the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] objects, I will yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FREAR. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] if I may have five minutes if necessary?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I have a clipping, taken from the Associated Press, which shows that Secretary Mellon denounces a statement made by Governor Blaine, of Wisconsin, that he—Mr. Mellon—is not enforcing the law. In the statement Mr. Mellon refers to a number of letters that he has "written to Representative FREAR" on the subject. This is the statement carried by the Associated Press:

MELLON DENOUNCES BLAINE STATEMENT—DECLARES THERE IS NO BASIS OF TRUTH IN CHARGES MADE BY WISCONSIN GOVERNOR—TAX LAW ENFORCED, HE SAYS—SPEECH MADE TO PROGRESSIVES CALLED BY TREASURY HEAD APPEAL TO CLASS PREJUDICE.

[By the Associated Press.]

Replying yesterday to the address by Governor Blaine, of Wisconsin, before the meeting of progressives Saturday, Secretary Mellon declared the Wisconsin governor "distorts my statement and endeavors to portray an injurious situation which does not exist" with reference to the collection of incomes and surtaxes on excess profits.

"Criticism of public officials and of their administration," said Secretary Mellon, "is commendable and useful to the people where there is laxity and ineffective service in the conduct of office, but when wholly unjustifiable and without any basis of truth, it is harmful, as in this instance, and can only be understood as an appeal to class prejudice in a selfish effort to obtain some political capital."

The Internal Revenue Bureau is administering the revenue law impartially, Mr. Mellon asserted, and is applying it to large corporations and wealthy individuals, as well as to others. The Secretary referred to the letters he had written to Representative FREAR, of Wisconsin, some weeks ago, and declared they had definitely explained the question of taxation as applied to stock dividends and corporation surpluses, to which Governor Blaine particularly referred in his speech.

"The taxes imposed by existing law are being completely enforced to the fullest extent which the law prescribes," the Secretary added, "and any further action in this respect would have to be in the nature of the taxes levied by Congress."

Mr. Chairman, I have no brief from Governor Blaine, nor have I directly or indirectly discussed Mr. Mellon or tax matters with him. I do not know on what evidence Governor Blaine made his charges when discussing taxation before the progressive conference. I do know that all the letters written by Secretary Mellon to me, and found in the RECORD of November 28, contain nothing but general denials or assertions, and avoid specific charges I have made in letters to him.

Let me courteously, but frankly and publicly, put questions to Mr. Mellon that he has thus far refused to answer.

Have you, Mr. Mellon, imposed a single penalty under section 220 or prior law which requires you to do so whenever accumulated surpluses of corporations are held in order to avoid payment of individual surtaxes? This section was a continuance of authority contained in prior laws cited you in my letter of October 23, 1922.

In this connection, I call your attention to Standard Oil of New Jersey's statement of 775 per cent net profit in 10 years, or 77½ per cent net profit annually, of which over 400 per cent is alleged to be held in surplus for stock dividends. Also Atlantic Standard Oil, with 900 per cent stock dividends recently declared; Vacuum Oil, with 300 per cent stock dividends, and many other companies quoted in the press. Have you made any demands on such companies for the facts or have you imposed any penalties?

I repeat a press statement previously quoted in my letters to you, which says you have not, and based on such statement and your failure to answer I allege you have not.

Did you, Mr. Mellon, begin the stock dividend melon cutting with a 200 per cent dividend for Gulf Oil, your own company? Did Standard Oil only follow your lead? Did you fail to penalize yourself or that company? Again, on information in my hands I charge these to be the facts.

Stock dividends from corporation surplus declared within the last three months are estimated at nearly $2,000,000,000 in addition to former cash dividends, which in case of Standard Oil, United States Steel, and many other companies represent extortionate prices charged the general public. What cases, if any, have you penalized to check the merry riot now filling the financial columns of the press?

You say in your letters these are secret records, under your control as such. That is what Governor Blaine, I understand, has condemned.

You state in the press dispatch that you are enforcing the law impartially. I can not set forth the facts in my possession but I am informed that an organized coterie of agents has existed for pressing tax refunds and tax contests on the Treasury. These statements have been made to me by several men.

I now ask a direct question that an investigation will disclose. Is it true that due to legal evasions possible under existing law, disclosed by the secret records of your office, that Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Morgan, Mr. Mellon, and others of great wealth are not paying one-fifth of the income tax they are popularly supposed to pay under the law based on their wealth, due to investments in tax-free securities, stock dividends, trusts, stock and bond exchanges, and other forms of tax avoidance? I gather this is so from your official report, issued to-day.

These are matters that Congress has permitted to remain secret for no logical reason, apparently, and I am hoping your answers will be specific, so that the necessity for full publicity of Treasury records can be determined by Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I have written Secretary Mellon to that effect and here repeat the statements in substance. * * *

As the amount of penalties and taxes alleged to be involved reaches many millions of dollars, I submit the facts presented in the correspondence offered on November 25 contained in the RECORD of November 28 warrants such action on his part, and I invite his aid to that end.

Mr. Chairman, any review of cases that amounts to more than a whitewash of the Government's tax administration must have presidential permission to inspect departmental records. Such records ought to be made public by law.

I have briefly charged that upwards of $2,000,000,000 in corporation-accumulated surpluses are disclosed to be given out as stock dividends. That Secretary Mellon's own Gulf Oil Co. started the wild melon-cutting race. That one purpose of sudden disclosures of huge profits is due to fear by great interests that tax laws by future Congresses may reach the enormous excess profits and tax dodging now practiced under Secretary Mellon's régime. That the tax administration of the internal-revenue office is still influenced by a small group of men in and out of the office whose activities have become a public scandal and that millions of dollars in penalties and surtaxes can be collected if the law is enforced affecting surpluses.

Mr. Chairman, the report of Secretary Mellon given to the press to-day makes confession of a shameful condition disclosed in the Treasury taxing machinery.

He devotes an entire page of his report in describing tax-dodging, tax-evading, tax-escaping methods employed by men of large wealth. It is the most serious indictment of great financiers ever given to the public.

After a miserable confession of assumed weakness of present laws and of a tax administration that "permits" this situation to exist, he proposes a complete surrender to tax dodging by reducing surtaxes from 50 per cent on incomes over $200,000 to 25 per cent, thus placing a premium on tax dodging which he fails to reach.

Knowing Secretary Mellon's great wealth, his personal interest, his associates, and his opposition to surtaxes, excess profits taxes on undistributed profits, inheritance, and other tax legislation passed by Congress, is it not time for the financial adviser of the administration to put forth his own efforts to stop accumulated surplus tax fraud evasions that reach many millions of dollars of lost income to the Government, due to his failure to enforce existing law? Is it not time the Treasury records were made public, when Secretary Mellon permits the man of large wealth to escape because that man knows how to dodge the law but holds the small taxpayer down to the limit? That is new doctrine in this country, and reviewing his proposal we may well say of his report "Verily the mountain has labored hard to bring forth a mouse." Is it not strange and significant that no recommendations for curative laws whereby tax evasions can be restricted are found in the report. No proposal to reduce the surtax will meet the situation. All we need to do is to enforce the law and pass such additional laws as may be found necessary to protect the Treasury from tax evasions. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I believe Secretary Mellon is personally a man of high integrity but I believe he has failed to enforce the law because of his environment, and, judging from the recorded statements before our committee, he has no understanding of the importance of it. I could pick out a dozen men before me whom I believe, if placed in that position, would enforce the law and recover the penalties, and with them the surtaxes that would be released, reaching hundreds of millions of dollars.

But a situation confronts us, and I am placing it before the House without any personal feeling or partisanship. It makes no difference who the individual is. I have the highest respect for Mr. Mellon personally, but I say we can not close our eyes as a Congress to the fact that this law is here, and that he makes no recommendation for any law to cure conditions except by virtue of a long-distance constitutional amendment. Doctor Seligman says there are $20,000,000,000 worth of these securities out to-day. It is useless to try to pass a constitutional amendment to prevent their issue when $20,000,000,000 of tax-free securities are open for investment. What we need is enforcement of existing law and real curative tax legislation that I have proposed in the Mellon correspondence. I shall submit the "Mellon correspondence" with this discussion for information of those who are interested.

I repeat that in my opinion Secretary Mellon should impose the 25 per cent penalty provided by section 220 on the enormous accumulated surpluses of corporations not needed in the business, leaving it for the corporation wherever possible to do so to justify its acts. In this I believe one of his own companies by declaring a 200 per cent stock dividend served to invite others to follow until 900 per cent stock dividends and even 1,600 per cent stock dividends have been among the surpluses that are reported and will thus avoid payment of personal surtaxes.

For this reason, if these accumulations are to be reached a retroactive tax on undistributed profits should be enacted by Congress to reach personal tax evasions on such part of $2,000,000,000 or more paid in stock dividends as may seem proper to reach. It would also seem proper in view of enormous profits disclosed after the repeal of the law that the excess-profits tax law be reenacted affecting profits over 8 per cent or other reasonable exemption, and in order to reach unconscionable profits now exorted by corporations that fix prices without fear of competition.

Other legislation I submit calls for publicity of all Treasury tax records, for inheritance and gift tax laws or amendments, and other matters disclosed by the Macomber Supreme Court stock dividend decision.

Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the Associated Press article contributed by Secretary Mellon's statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back two minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, whenever any question is before this House affecting immediately or remotely the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment, the great majority of this House on that question is subjected to a lecture for lack of statesmanship and sincerity by gentlemen from Baltimore and New York, and I for one am getting a little tired of it. [Applause.] Why the "famous statesman from Baltimore" should feel called upon to thus reflect upon the motives and intelligence of his colleagues I am not aware, but for the gentlemen from New York, their right must not be questioned. After all, is not it known as Greater New York? Is not it a fact that a majority of its population are foreign born? I hasten to withdraw such a plebian expression. I should have said, did they not come from abroad, or to use a commercial term, are they not imported? Is it not a fact that within this sacred citadel is located the great palladium of learning and virtue, the Bowery? But it is not why the gentlemen from New York are so superior, suffice it that the fact exists. They have intimated it on the floor, and, if consulted in private, I have no doubt would admit it themselves.

Whenever you attend a cheap show in this city you are inflicted with a disgusting abuse of the prohibition laws. The cheaper the show the more disgusting the abuse. In fact, so similar are many thrusts that we hear there to those we hear here in the House that we are led to suspicion a common inspiration.

If there is any policy of this Government in the framing of which I had a small part and of which I am proud and in which I was sincere it is its policy to rid itself of the liquor traffic. This traffic thrived upon the misery it created and fattened upon the miseries of other vices that it encouraged. Even in villages it would sell its drunk-making concoctions in the front room, foster gambling in the back room, and encourage prostitution upstairs.

The wonder is not that the decent people of this country choked this serpent but that they endured its slime at all. Working together in this effort stood the women and children, the church and the school, while opposed to it stood equally as united the gambler, thug, and the prostitute. When did sincerity, enlightenment, and other virtues leave this first class and take up its abode in the second? So earnest and sincere were those advocating this reform that they did not stop until they had written their achievement upon the Nation's sacred scroll, the Constitution of the United States. So determined and vindictive yet is the small minority opposing that they do not bow in humble submission but stand out in open defiance of the Constitution itself.

Yet those familiar with its history need not be surprised. When this country was young and the immortal Washington was its great President, the first rebellion against its authority—mind you, in open arms—was the whisky rebellion. As it was its first, so it is now its last. In every community when the local government sought in any way its regulation or improvement this traffic immediately plotted its overthrow. It is at this hour scheming and devising its own resurrection. It is backed by influential friends and great resources. There are those Members of this House giving it aid and comfort. The final repeal of the eighteenth amendment is its known aim, though I have not heard its advocates on this floor have the sincerity to confess it.

It has been asserted that the number of crimes against the United States has increased and that the expense of enforcing the prohibition law is great. That the crimes against the United States are increasing is natural, because an entire field of State jurisdiction has been delegated to the Federal Government, and while crimes against the United States have increased, all other crimes which flourished during the liquor traffic and cognizable only in State courts have in a much greater proportion decreased. I speak from knowledge when I say that the doors to the county jails in my district, jails that were often crowded, now frequently stand open. Men in my county who led in the forces of the wets are now embarrassed when reminded of it. What matters it to the people who pay the bills if their taxes are increased to suppress Federal crimes if their State taxes are still further decreased by lack of local crimes? Violations of the liquor laws are now carried on by organized criminals, and their violation is not the minor matter as is the violation of other crimes, but savors of treason itself. This Government can not exist unless it can vindicate its power to enforce every law. The greater the expense now incurred, the more vigorous the prosecutions now inaugurated, the sooner will the power of this Nation be vindicated and the least expense result in the end.

We, the residents of the small towns and the great rural districts, see the benefit of these laws and, frankly, we intend to enforce them regardless of the jibes of the cheap vaudeville monologists, in spite of the reflections of the "all-wise" statesmen from the great metropolis where vice best thrives, and in spite of the antics of the distinguished "horseman from Maryland." [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. Two minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. How much has the gentleman from Tennessee?

The CHAIRMAN. Four minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] yielded back two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has four minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] use some time?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I promised the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] that I would yield to him.

Mr. MADDEN. I will yield to him my time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. HILL. Eight minutes, Mr. Chairman. There were four minutes on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that there is just six minutes left.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to thank both sides of the House for this expression of confidence in yielding me this time. [Applause.] I might say that in the next House of Representatives, on the bases of the votes cast for me in the recent election, I shall be about 50 per cent Democrat and 50 per cent Republican. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I wish to explain to the House in brief these amendments, which I consider perfecting amendments, which I propose to offer on page 27 of the bill H. R. 13180, which is the pending Treasury appropriation bill.

I do not think any of my colleagues here will be surprised to know that the section to which these amendments are directed is the section appropriating $9,000,000 for the use of the prohibition enforcement unit in the Treasury Department.

As a preliminary to a discussion of certain elements of this bill I desire to put in the RECORD the provisions of this section, which are very short. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. KETCHAM. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan objects.

Mr. HILL. I have not the time to read the section which the gentleman has prevented me putting in the RECORD by his objection, but the sum of $9,000,000 is appropriated for the prohibition unit. I have six amendments here which I propose to offer at the proper time.

The first amendment strikes out any appropriation for Federal Prohibition Commissioner Haynes's personal press-bureau publicity.

The second amendment strikes out an appropriation of $130,000 to $150,000 for the violation of the Volstead Act itself and of the State prohibition laws by permitting agents of the Federal prohibition unit to purchase liquor which they claim they want for evidence purposes, in violation of law.

The third amendment is one which will save a great deal of money to the country. It provides that none of the money appropriated shall be used to pay the expenses for stump speeches before private organizations made by the Federal prohibition commissioner or his assistants. If I have the time I want to discuss that.

The next amendment is a provision which strikes out of the appropriation bill the appropriation for legal advisers, assistant counsel, special counsel, attorneys, or law clerks to the prohibition commissioner, on the ground that they can not interpret the law as it exists, and are therefore useless. I have the evidence for that. For months I have tried to get from the prohibition office a definition of what "nonintoxicating" means in title 2, section 29, of the Volstead Act.

Mr. LINDBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Briefly.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I suppose the object of all this is to make the law absolutely inoperative.

Mr. HILL. No; the object is to have an effective way of preventing the sending all over the United States of what I might call bootleg grapes from the gentleman's State. [Laughter.]

Mr. LINEBERGER. The gentleman admits that his amendments would make the law absolutely inoperative?

Mr. HILL. No. I also propose that law enforcement be transferred from the Treasury Department to the Department of Justice, which the gentleman and those whom he represents oppose.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I suppose the gentleman is an authority on all this?

Mr. HILL. No; the gentleman is not an authority, but he was United States attorney for five years, and has had some experience in honest law enforcement; that is all.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Some experience.

Mr. HILL. Some experience.

The next amendment which I propose to offer is an amendment providing that none of the money so appropriated shall be used for propaganda issued by the prohibition enforcement unit to defeat Members of Congress because of their votes in Congress. I have the evidence that Federal Prohibition Commissioner Haynes has so expended funds of the unit.

The next amendment provides for ultimate transfer of law enforcement to the Department of Justice, where it belongs, and where I for one can not understand why the Anti-Saloon League will not permit it to go. I introduced a bill for this purpose in April, 1921.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. How much more time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes and a half remaining.

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman briefly.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Are all of these amendments which the gentleman proposes intended to strengthen the Volstead Act?

Mr. HILL. All of these amendments are made for the purpose of attempting to obtain honest law enforcement. I am glad the gentleman asked that question.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HILL. No; I can not yield unless the gentleman will get me more time.

Mr. TINCHER. The gentleman may have all the time he wants as far as I am concerned.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman try to get me more time?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. HILL. I am very glad the gentleman from Washington asked me that question, because I have here Bouvier's Law Dictionary and I want to read to you the definition of lynch law.

Lynch law: A common phrase used to express the vengeance of a mob inflicting injury and committing an outrage upon a person suspected of some offense.

I want to say to you as a premise to what I wish I had the time to say in full to this House, that no unit of the United States Government which quotes with approval lawless violence by the Ku-Klux Klan should receive a $9,000,000 appropriation from this Government.

I hold in my hand one of the daily newspaper publicity prints issued by the Federal prohibition commissioner, and I want to read to you part of it. I hope I will have time to read the specific language that I object to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Will you get me some more time?

Mr. CRAMTON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is fixed by the House.

Mr. HILL. I thank the gentleman from Michigan for his effort.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman is in favor of the return of the saloon, as I understand? [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. No; I am not in favor of the return of the saloon, and if the gentleman had paid any attention to the speeches I have made he would know it.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. But the gentleman's speeches argue for the saloon and not against it.

Mr. HILL. That shows that the gentleman is not a lawyer.

Now I wish to read this statement issued by the Federal prohibition commissioner:

"Release afternoon papers."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been fixed by the House.

Mr. HILL. I want only to read this one thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

Salaries: Secretary of the Treasury, $12,000; Undersecretary of the Treasury, to be nominated by the President and appointed by him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive compensation at the rate of $7,500 per annum and shall perform such duties in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury as may be prescribed by the Secretary or by law, and under the provisions of section 177, Revised Statutes, in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall perform the duties of the Secretary until a successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease, $7,500; 3 Assistant Secretaries, at $5,000 each; clerk to the Secretary, $3,000; executive clerk, $2,400; stenographer, $1,800; 3 private secretaries, one to each Assistant Secretary, at $1,800 each; Government actuary, under control of the Treasury, $4,000; clerks—2 of class 4, 3 of class 3, 2 of class 2, 1 of class 1; chief messenger, $1,100; 2 assistant chief messengers, at $1,000 each; messengers—3 at $900 each, 4 at $840 each; messenger boy, $600; in all, $75,260.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. Before the gentleman does that I wish to make a point of order against the provision in this paragraph for an Undersecretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. The position of Undersecretary of the Treasury is not authorized by law, and it is legislation upon an appropriation bill in violation of the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I can only say that there is no basic law authorizing an Undersecretary. It was created in an appropriation bill at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury two years ago and passed by the House. The House voted on it by roll call, and the salary at the beginning was fixed at $10,000. The Appropriations Committee cut it down to $7,500. It is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. In the beginning we had one Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MADDEN. We had five during the war.

Mr. BLANTON. But that was temporary. Now, in addition to an Undersecretary, we have three Assistant Secretaries.

Mr. MADDEN. That was so before the war.

Mr. BLANTON. I am speaking about what we already have. Three Assistant Secretaries, and this Undersecretary is an entirely new position.

Mr. MADDEN. No; not entirely new.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. After I read this extract.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the amendment.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas. [Laughter.]

Mr. TINCHER. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the amendments that he is to offer should be known and classified as dry or wet amendments?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the question is not in order. I insist that the debate be confined to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF CLERK.

Salaries: Chief clerk, including $300 as superintendent of Treasury Building, who shall be the chief executive officer of the department and who may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury to sign official papers and documents during the temporary absence of the Secretary, Undersecretary, and Assistant Secretaries of the department, $4,000; assistant chief clerk, $3,000; assistant superintendent of Treasury Building, $2,500; administrative clerk, $2,000; clerks—1 $2,000, 4 of class 4, 1 of class 3, 1 of class 2, 5 of class 1, 1 $1,000; operator of photographic copying machine, $800; 2 messengers, at $840 each; 2 assistant messengers, at $720 each; messenger boy, $420; storekeeper, $1,200; telegraphers—1 $1,400; 1 $1,200; telephone and telegraph operator, $1,200; 4 telephone switchboard operators, at $720 each; mechanical superintendent, $2,250; chief engineer, $1,400; 4 assistant engineers, at $1,000 each (including 1 for outside buildings); 8 elevator conductors, at $720 each, and the use of laborers as relief elevator conductors during rush hours is authorized; 8 firemen, at $720 each; coal passer, $600; chief electrician, $1,600; locksmith and electrician, $1,400; captain of the watch, $1,400; 2 lieutenants of the watch, at $900 each; 65 watchmen, at $720 each; foreman of laborers, $1,200; assistant foreman of laborers, $840; 8 chauffeurs, at $720 each; 4 automobile truck laborers, at $660 each; skilled laborer—1, $840; 2, at $720 each; 2 electricians, at $1,200 each; wireman, $900; 39 laborers, at $660 each; plumber, at $1,100; painter, $1,100; plumber's assistant, $780; attendant for emergency relief room, $660; head of char force, $720; 85 charwomen, at $240 each; 2 carpenters, at $1,000 each. Winder Building and annex: Engineer, $1,000; 3 firemen, at $720 each; elevator conductor, $720; 4 watchmen, at $720 each; 3 laborers (one of whom, when necessary, shall assist and relieve the elevator conductor), at $660 each; forewoman of char force, $480; 12 charwomen, at $240 each; female laborer for ladies' toilets, $660. Cox Building, 1709 New York Avenue: Two watchmen, at $720 each; laborer, $660. Auditor's Building: Forewoman of char force, $480; 25 charwomen, at $240 each; 2 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 7 laborers (one of whom, when necessary, shall assist and relieve the elevator conductor), at $660 each; female laborer, $660; skilled laborer, $840; in all, $217,310.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I make a point of order to that part of the second paragraph that refers to the Undersecretary—that provision at the top of page 3 in lines 2 and 3.

Mr. MADDEN. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Treasury Department Annex, Fourteenth and B Streets NW.: Carpenter, $1,200; plumber, $1,200; electrician, $1,200; two mechanics, at $900 each; captain of the watch, $1,400; 2 lieutenants of the watch, at $900 each; 21 watchmen, at $720 each; janitor, $1,200; head of char force, $660; 2 assistant heads of char force, at $480 each; 70 charwomen, at $240 each; 8 male laborers, at $660 each; 4 female laborers, at $660 each; in all, $51,260.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what policy has been adopted in this department, if he knows, with regard to granting an extra half holiday a week to employees.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think any policy except granting a half holiday in the summer season. I am opposed to any holiday except in the summer season.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to find out about the authority of the department to do that without coming to Congress. I want to know if they have authority to arbitrarily grant holidays. It is given out in the press that the Post Office Department is to give a half holiday a week, that is to begin in January, next month. It is to be made permanent throughout the year. Has that been authorized?

Mr. MADDEN. I only know from what I have seen in the newspapers.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois has had considerable to do with the Post Office Department.

Mr. MADDEN. I propose to look into it. I am opposed to it except during the hot summer months.

Mr. BLANTON. In the hot summer months no one objects to it, but that applies to all departments. If the Post Office Department gives arbitrarily a half holiday to its employees and requires them to work only five and a half days a week, besides giving them all of the holidays allowed by law, every other department of the Government is going to follow suit.

Mr. MADDEN. That will not be permitted if I have anything to say about it.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is going to take it up with the Post Office Department?

Mr. MADDEN. They are not acting now, but considering the matter.

Mr. BLANTON. They have not been to see the committee about it?

Mr. MADDEN. No; but when they do come, if they do not come voluntarily, we will send for them. We will have a hearing, but we do not propose to inaugurate any such policy.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For washing and hemming towels, purchase of awnings and fixtures, window shades and fixtures, alcohol, bensine, turpentine, varnish, baskets, belting, bellows, bowls, brooms, buckets, brushes, canvas, crash, cloth, chamois skins, cotton waste, door and window fasteners, dusters; flower-garden, street, and engine hose; lace leather, lye, nails, oils, plants, picks, pitchers, powders, stencil plates, hand stamps and repairs of same, spittoons, soap, matches, match safes, sponges, tacks, traps, thermometers, toilet paper, tools, towels, towel racks, tumblers, wire, zinc, and for blacksmithing, repairs of machinery, removal of rubbish, sharpening tools, street car fares not exceeding $300, advertising for proposals, and for sales at public auction in the District of Columbia, of condemned property belonging to the Treasury Department, payment of auctioneer fees, and purchase of other absolutely necessary articles, $15,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, on page 7, line 4, I move to strike out the word "alcohol."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 4, strike out the word "alcohol."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what use they have for alcohol.

Mr. MADDEN. It is used for cleaning purposes. We can put in the word "denatured" if the gentleman has any doubts about it.

Mr. BLANTON. I know that they have benzine, and that is for cleaning purposes also.

Mr. MADDEN. They need them both.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not know what amount of alcohol they have been purchasing which was not denatured.

Mr. MADDEN. Very little.

Mr. BLANTON. Then they have been purchasing alcohol not denatured.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know that they have.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the law which permits certain Government institutions to withdraw alcohol without paying the tax there has been a number of institutions withdrawing alcohol without paying the tax. I doubt very seriously whether it is used for proper purposes in many instances.

Mr. MADDEN. As far as I am concerned I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is willing to have an amendment inserting the word "denatured" in front of the word "alcohol."

Mr. MADDEN. I think so.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LOWREY. I want to suggest that I think it is not fair to bring up the question of alcohol in the absence of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman from Maryland is around here somewhere. You could not get him far away from the Chamber while this bill is under consideration. Mr. Chairman, my attention having been directed to the gentleman from Maryland, I call attention to the fact that he said that in the next House he would be here under a 50–50 vote of Republicans and Democrats, and as his whole argument has been, from the time he first came to this House until the present day, directed against the eighteenth amendment, I call his attention to the fact that the eighteenth amendment was adopted by the legislatures of 46 States, Democratic legislatures, Republican legislatures, just as strongly Republican as he has ever been, and just as strongly Democratic as he can ever claim to be in the next House. It little behooves him to strike at that amendment when two of the smallest States alone refused to adopt it. It is the fixed policy of the Government, and however much he seeks to camouflage his six amendments, however much he seeks to throw smoke screens around them, I am sure that the genial rider of the great white charger from Baltimore must admit that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS] was correct when he stated that the object and purpose of it all is to get rid of the prohibition laws and to bring back places—he may not call them saloons—but dives where even now in the city of Baltimore you can go in and get your beer and whisky.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. HILL. I ask the gentleman, for my own private use, if he will not give me a list of the places in Baltimore where he may get beer?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I do not want to give the gentleman an opportunity of knowing more places than he probably has access to at the present time; but I have heard that there are places there, as there are in St. Louis and in Chicago and in New York, where men of prominence, who have had five years experience as United States district attorneys, or where men of wealth can go and get what they want, by paying for it.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman believe in popular government?

Mr. BLANTON. I believe in the Government of the United States and in the Constitution of the United States, which provides a means for altering it whenever the people get ready to change it.

This eighteenth amendment was provided for in a lawful way. The Congress by an overwhelming vote submitted it to the various States and 46 out of 48 legislatures of States elected by the people approved that law, and it has become the fundamental law of the land, and neither the gentleman from Maryland, I repeat, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] said, nor any other man in this House will have the power to do away with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment and to modify it by inserting in front of the word "alcohol" the word "denatured."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment and modify it. Is there objection?

Mr. LONDON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Of course, the amendment made by the gentleman from Texas to strike out the word "alcohol" was formal. Nevertheless, in a way it is characteristic of the fanaticism of this whole liquor question, of this whole prohibition business. I need not tell you that I am a believer in temperance. I certainly practice it. I never in my life took a drink unless I wanted it. [Laughter.] And that is the real definition of a temperance man, because the intemperate man drinks when he does not want it, when it hurts him. When I voted against the constitutional prohibition amendment I cast what I then believed, and believe now, to be a logical and a consistent vote. If there is any justification for a Constitution, it is because it is intended to protect the individual against the invasion of his rights by the State, against the oppression of minorities by temporary majorities. Constitutions are adopted for the protection of the individual, not for the purpose of checking or curtailing his rights; and for the same reason that I voted for the woman suffrage amendment I voted against the prohibition amendment. The former amendment enlarges human rights, the latter diminishes them.

Of course, I am not a friend of the saloon. The saloon is the worst enemy of democracy. The saloon is the only university that the politician attends. It is the rendezvous of the vilest elements. I am really saddened by the flagrant violation of prohibition law, not only in New York but everywhere. As you enter the smoking room of a parlor car you always notice that somebody is hiding something, and the feeling overcomes you that you are embarrassing a gentleman. If you are a lawyer you immediately take refuge in the legal presumption that the holder of the bottle has it not in violation of law but by virtue of a prescription, and that he is taking it medicinally.

One is called upon continually to witness the violation of a law which is universally disregarded. Those who are interested in temperance, those who are interested in maintaining respect for law, should make a study of the question to determine to what extent we should go as a legislature in liberalizing the eighteenth amendment. Do not force upon the people a law which they can not stomach. Do not assume that you are wiser or better than the great mass of the people. It is the inalienable privilege of a democracy to be wicked if it so chooses, or to be stupid, as it so often exercises that right in voting for Democrats and Republicans, instead of voting for us.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman be consistent and advocate the repeal of the excessive speed laws and of the laws against reckless driving, because they are universally violated?

Mr. LONDON. Oh, there is a world of difference between the two.

Mr. GILBERT. I understand; but the gentleman was basing his argument upon the ground that the prohibition laws are so frequently violated.

Mr. LONDON. I want you to make a study of the question. I want you to see to what extent it is necessary to liberalize the law so as to adapt yourselves to the real sentiment of the people.

Mr. GILBERT. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it is not nearly as universally violated as the speed laws by automobiles.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. During the war somebody proposed that the name of the Pacific Ocean be changed because the name was too suggestive of pacifism. The gentleman's objection to the word "alcohol" is in line with that policy.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment. Just preceding the word "alcohol," line 4, insert the word "denatured."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 4, preceding the word "alcohol," insert the word "denatured."

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer a substitute amendment. Substitute the word "nonbeverage."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Insert the word "nonbeverage" before the word "alcohol," line 4, page 7.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 11, noes 28.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC DEBT SERVICE.

For necessary expenses connected with the administration of any public debt issues and United States paper currency issues with which the Secretary of the Treasury is charged, including rent in the District of Columbia, and including the salaries of the Commissioner of the Public Debt at $6,000, Deputy Commissioner of the Public Debt at $4,000, Chief of the Division of Loans and Currency at $3,500, two Assistant Chiefs of the Division of Loans and Currency at $3,000 each, Register of the Treasury at $4,000, Assistant Register of the Treasury at $2,500, Chief Clerk Office of the Register of the Treasury at $3,000, Chief of the Division of Public Debt Accounts and Audit at $3,000, Chief of the Division of Paper Custody at $3,000, and the salaries of such assistants, accountants, clerks, and other employees in the District of Columbia as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary, $3,250,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum except as above provided and except the following: One at not exceeding $4,500, 1 at not exceeding $3,500, 8 at not exceeding $3,000, 4 at not exceeding $2,700, 23 at not exceeding $2,500, 1 at not exceeding $2,400, 5 at not exceeding $2,250, 26 at not exceeding $2,200, and 48 at not exceeding $2,000: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury may allot such amount of this appropriation as in his judgment may be necessary, not exceeding $85,000, for expenditure in the Post Office Department in connection with the distribution, sale, and keeping of accounts of Treasury savings securities, as provided in the deficiency appropriation act approved November 4, 1918, and no person shall be employed under such allotment at a rate of compensation exceeding $2,500 per annum, and only one person shall be employed at a rate exceeding $1,800 per annum.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order in order to ask a question or two. This paragraph beginning on page 13, headed "public debt service," and ending on top of page 15, is all legislation that is not authorized by law, and it provides quite a number of positions——

Mr. MADDEN. All of the activities in the paragraph are authorized by law.

Mr. BLANTON. The chairman of the committee understands I do not intend to make a point of order against the paragraph even though it is subject to a point of order if any part of it is necessary, but if there is any one of these positions unnecessary I think it ought to come out of the bill, and I want to get some information about it.

Mr. MADDEN. Let me tell the gentleman what we have done. The expense of these activities for 1922 was $4,500,000; for 1923 by the consolidation it has been cut down to $3,700,000. For 1924 we propose to cut it down to $3,250,000, and without this consolidation that could not have been done.

Mr. BLANTON. When did it first become necessary to have a commissioner of public debt at $6,000?

Mr. MADDEN. We have had him right along when the debt was increased from a billion to twenty-three billion dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. If we can continue to reduce it, as the gentleman indicated this morning when he said that the $670,000,000 deficit had been wiped out until we now had a $170,000,000 surplus, we will not need this commissioner of debt?

Mr. MADDEN. We are reducing it. We have reduced it from $4,500,000 in 1922 down to $3,700,000 in 1923 and we are reducing it in this bill to $3,250,000, and we are going down every year with it, and we hope soon to be able to eliminate five or six hundred more people there.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman believe that all of the employees who are provided for in this paragraph are absolutely necessary?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, they are engaged in the most important work the Government has. We have gone into this thing very thoroughly—and I give you my word there is no more important thing and nothing has been more seriously investigated than this—and nothing was cut in like proportion to this.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation.

The Clerk read as follows:

WORLD WAR FOREIGN DEBT COMMISSION.

For expenses of the World War Foreign Debt Commission, including personal services in the District of Columbia, and printing and binding, $20,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. Is this the first appropriation made for this activity?

Mr. MADDEN. This is the second. We had an appropriation last year—made after an investigation of the law authorizing the appointment of the commission—for a like amount. It was made under the State Department and was transferred.

Mr. SNELL. This is the first one in this regular bill?

Mr. MADDEN. It was transferred from the State Department to the Treasury Department, where it properly belongs.

Mr. SNELL. So the commission is functioning?

Mr. MADDEN. It is functioning, but they have not any employees. They have not hired a man to perform any work. They are doing their own work. The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury is acting secretary of the commission, but later on they will have to have some people, but they do not know how many. I hope they will not have to employ many, but we do not know exactly just what that will be. This is about the only thing in the bill we do not know any of the details about.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collecting the revenue from customs, including not exceeding $300,000 for the detection and prevention of frauds upon the customs revenue, $11,950,000, of which $200,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I am informed that the officials of the Customs Service asked for quite a substantial sum more than is given here.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the recommendation for the appropriation for the current year was $11,300,000. They asked for $12,250,000, which was $950,000 more than the appropriation of the current year. The committee recommends $650,000, which is $300,000 less than they asked for.

The reason why we made this reduction was that in asking for $950,000 they set apart $450,000 of the $950,000 for the fiscal year 1924 and $500,000 of it for 1923—for the remaining part of 1923—on the assumption that this bill would not become a law before the 4th of March. It was manifest that $500,000 could not be used in three months to do the work for which $450,000 was asked for the entire year, and the customs officials who appeared before the committee themselves admitted that the proper proportion of the $500,000 which they asked for the fiscal year 1923 would be on the basis of $450,000 for a full year, but if it was for four months it would be $150,000. Then, they had a laboratory in which they wanted to test dyes, the cost of which they said would be $65,000—$150,000 and $65,000 together would be $215,000. It was also clear to the committee that they could not spend the $65,000 for the remainder of the fiscal year 1923 to complete the laboratory, so that the committee took out what we believed they could not spend and made the total for 1923 $200,000, which we asked to be immediately available.

Mr. LONGWORTH. They asked for certain other sums, did they not?

Mr. MADDEN. They asked for $40,000 for other work.

Mr. LONGWORTH. To be expended in the District of Columbia?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; for which we did not think there was any justification. The gentleman who came down and testified before the committee was very anxious to get all he could get. I think he is very patriotic and very anxious to perform all the functions that are to be performed. We had to bring him back three different times before we could nail him to any specific fact, but when we got down to specific facts it was clear to the chairman of the committee that made the investigation that his request was not justified.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is the gentleman entirely confident that this sum will be sufficient for the collection of customs? I understand that under the present favorable circumstances they have developed a larger revenue than was ever before received in the history of this country.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask the gentleman from Ohio this question: If $450,000 was all they need for 1924 to do the same work which they proposed to do in 1923, and that $450,000 was sufficient for an entire year, does he think they could use $500,000 in four months in 1923?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would not care to express an opinion, but I would think not. My only concern was that after we had found that we were deriving a very much larger monthly return from the customs revenue than ever before in history, and with the large amount of imports coming into the country, which are being delayed in the customhouses, as I understand——

Mr. MADDEN. They are being delayed because they have not the means now, but they will not be delayed when they have this $200,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is unfortunate that they should be short.

Mr. MADDEN. The Committee on Appropriations, having complete jurisdiction for the reporting of all appropriations, has the same power to report and make the sums immediately available as they have to recommend a deficiency.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I want to ask the gentleman, have the imports increased?

Mr. MADDEN. The revenues have increased. The revenues up to October were the highest for any year, $356,000,000. That was about $30,000,000 more than ever before. The revenues for the month of October were $40,000,000, and the revenues for the first 18 days of November were $27,000,000. I am told that the total revenue for the month of November amounts to $41,500,000, and it is estimated that the annual revenue to be derived through the tariff act will run not less than $445,000,000 and may go to $506,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. Then, so far the Fordney tariff bill has not proved to be a stone wall against imports?

Mr. MADDEN. No. The revenues are coming in very satisfactorily, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LINEBERGER rose.

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield to the gentleman from California if he desires.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I wish to ask of the gentleman from Illinois this question: Does he consider this $200,000 which is being made immediately available to be sufficient to take care of the situation all over the country?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; that is the intention.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I ask that for this reason: The port of Los Angeles, in which I happen to be interested, has increased its tonnage from 200,000 to 1,000,000 tons a month in the last 18 months, and we are requiring at the present time 21 additional assistants, mostly appraisers. Some of our shippers are paying $1,000 demurrage on cargoes now. If that situation is general throughout the ports of the country, it seems to me this $200,000 is very small.

Mr. MADDEN. We have gone very carefully into this. We considered it for more than three days and went over it very carefully indeed. As I stated to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], they asked us for $950,000, of which $450,000 was asked for 1924, not for 1923. They proposed to do exactly the same thing for 1924 that they are doing with $450,000 in 1923, and $200,000 for the balance of the year 1923 will be on the same basis.

Mr. LINEBERGER. For how many months will that be?

Mr. MADDEN. Four months. It will be exactly on the same basis as the $450,000 would be for the entire fiscal year.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I want to ask the gentleman one more question.

Mr. MADDEN. Go ahead.

Mr. LINEBERGER. In the matter of the facilities for inspecting ships, is it possible under this appropriation for the Customs Service to acquire, from other departments of the Government, certain vessels required by the collector of customs, or do they have to purchase them outright?

Mr. MADDEN. I think the Navy Department has a lot of ships that we ought to be able to get turned over, if they are the kind of ships that could be used for that purpose. So has the Shipping Board a large number of ships.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Does the gentleman know why that transfer can not be made without putting it in an appropriation bill?

Mr. MADDEN. There is no reason in the world, and there is nothing in this appropriation bill that provides for that. This is for collections.

Mr. LINEBERGER. We have been attempting that for four months and have been unable to secure any results whatever.

Mr. MADDEN. The President ought to be able to help it along. He ought to be able to direct the transfer of one of those tramps from one bureau to another.

Mr. SNELL. The Shipping Board ought to be able to supply the necessary vessels.

Mr. MADDEN. There are plenty of ships owned by the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. With regard to this $200,000, it is merely a deficiency in this department for the fiscal year 1923, is it not?

Mr. MADDEN. That is true.

Mr. BLANTON. And during this Congress we have already passed four deficiency bills?

Mr. MADDEN. Not for this work.
Mr. BLANTON. But in this Congress?
Mr. MADDEN. Yes.
Mr. BLANTON. For the Sixty-seventh Congress the committee of which the gentleman is chairman has already secured the passage of four deficiency bills.
Mr. MADDEN. Three or four.
Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman indicated in his speech this morning that we would have another one very shortly?
Mr. MADDEN. Yes.
Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman indicated that just one item in it would be $42,000,000 for the Treasury Department to cover claims for overpaid income taxes.
Mr. MADDEN. To cover overpayments.
Mr. BLANTON. That $42,000,000 is a deficiency, is it not?
Mr. MADDEN. No; I do not think so.
Mr. BLANTON. The question I want to ask the gentleman is this: In taking the position before the country now as the gentleman and his committee and his administration do that they have reduced expenses for the fiscal year 1924 below those of the present fiscal year, 1923, ought not the gentleman at the same time to bring to the attention of the country all of these various deficiencies, which ought to be added to the expenses for the fiscal year 1923?
Mr. MADDEN. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the deficiencies to which he is calling our attention now are not deficiencies for current business transactions. They are deficiencies that have come down to us over the years, and they run back to 1918, 1917, 1916, and 1915.
Mr. BLANTON. But they are 1923 deficiencies.
Mr. MADDEN. They come to us in this fiscal year.
Mr. BLANTON. They are expenses that are coming in during this fiscal year.
Mr. MADDEN. They are expenses coming in this year, but they are not expenses incurred during this year.
Mr. BLANTON. This $200,000 is an expenditure for this fiscal year.
Mr. MADDEN. Oh, that is under the tariff act.
Mr. BLANTON. Under the ruling made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] that under the new rule the Committee on Appropriations have the right to bring in deficiency appropriations on an appropriation bill, I withdraw the point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order.
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. In this paragraph at the bottom of page 18 there was proposed by the Budget, was there not, $40,000 additional?
Mr. MADDEN. There was.
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That was for the purpose of being used in the District of Columbia?
Mr. MADDEN. Yes.
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman please inform the committee why that was stricken out?
Mr. MADDEN. I did that a moment ago when the gentleman was not in the Hall of the House.
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was not here.
Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.
Mr. FESS. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. MADDEN] a question. As I recall, the receipts under the former revenue bill during the last year of its enforcement amounted to about $837,000,000?
Mr. MADDEN. The amount was $356,000,000.
Mr. FESS. And under the present revenue bill you have a prospect of how much the first year?
Mr. MADDEN. We figure on not less than $445,000,000, and perhaps as high as $506,000,000.
Mr. FESS. In other words, the present tariff bill from a revenue standpoint will augment the revenues of the Government probably $100,000,000 in the first year?
Mr. MADDEN. Yes.
Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think it will be only reasonable to estimate that it will be very much more than that. The first month after the new tariff law went into force it was raising revenue on an average of more than $480,000,000 a year. Now, there had not been for many years such a great amount of imports in volume as there were during the last three months of the old Underwood law. That was rather natural, because people were trying to discount the operation of the new law. But even in the face of that, immediately after the passage of the new tariff law, the rates of which were higher than those of the former tariff law, during the months of October and November revenue has come in at a rate never before known.
Mr. FESS. As I recall the statement on the floor, the committee thought probably we would have $70,000,000 additional over the old law.
Mr. LONGWORTH. I think the committee very greatly underestimated the revenue.
Mr. FESS. From the standpoint of revenue it is a tremendous success?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is correct about that. It is a remarkable success—an unprecedented success. At the time the bill was passed I estimated the amount of revenue that would be collected at about $450,000,000, but as I recollect the Treasury statistician put it at about $405,000,000. Now I would like to call to the attention of the committee the fact that this great increase that has just been mentioned by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is over the former tariff as amended by the emergency act. The Underwood tariff in a time of peace before the war only produced a little over two hundred millions.
Mr. LONGWORTH. Two hundred and thirty millions or two hundred and forty millions.
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. When making a comparison between a Republican tariff bill and a Democratic tariff bill for revenue the comparison should be made with the amount of revenue received before the war under the Underwood bill in order to make it just. With reference to the imports, I will say that they are even larger than I anticipated, although I predicted that impoverished Europe would sell at any price that could be obtained.
The imports for the month since the new tariff bill has been in operation are almost double what they were in the preceding year for the corresponding period, but when it passed gentlemen on the other side said it would prove an embargo and return little revenue.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is not an abnormal condition which the gentleman has described, but in view of that fact does it not form a basis for the President to exercise his authority for reducing the revenue so as to take the burden off of the people?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is not an abnormal condition, but the usual prosperity that attends the passage of a Republican tariff bill. Business is improving everywhere.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does it not form a basis for the President to exercise his authority to reduce some of the duties?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not so far as the revenue is concerned. We need the money, and I know of no other way in which it can be so easily raised.
Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Would it not be possible in order to take care of an emergency to make this sum of $200,000 that is made available a little larger? It would not increase the total amount of the appropriation.
Mr. MADDEN. No; it would not increase the total amount of the appropriation but it would do this: It would take the money away from the places that are already occupied.
Mr. SNELL. Granting that is so, the people can not now get all the goods through the customhouse without paying demurrage. In Los Angeles they need 24 men, which would cost about $4,000 a month.
Mr. MADDEN. This is providing for 300 men, and that is what they said they needed.
Mr. SNELL. They can now use 300 men?
Mr. MADDEN. Yes; that is what they want. This will give them all that they need. If you give them any more money, you take it away from the appropriation to pay the men already employed.
Mr. SNELL. I am not in favor of giving them any more money than they need, but I do think we should give them money enough to take care of the existing conditions in these ports that are now congested.
Mr. MADDEN. We think we have exhausted every avenue of information in the customs service and we have reached the conclusion that nobody could easily controvert and we could not justify doing anything else than what we have done. We have no disposition to curtail activities, but on the other hand we want to give them every dollar that they need.
Mr. SNELL. And the gentleman is positive that this can be done with this appropriation?
Mr. MADDEN. With the information they have given us, if that is correct, and we base it on their information, we have no doubt that it can be done.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MADDEN. If I have the floor.
Mr. ROACH. Is this all that they asked for?
Mr. MADDEN. No; they asked for $500,000.
The Clerk read as follows:

Scales for customs service: For construction and installation of special automatic and recording scales for weighing merchandise, etc., in connection with imports at the various ports of entry under direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $100,000.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In regard to these special automatic scales, we all remember that when they were introduced for the weighing of sugar we expended something like $100,000 a year on the installation of these automatic scales. How far along have they got, and will there be any end to it?

Mr. MADDEN. There will be no end as long as we carry out this program; you will have to start building the first scales that were built over again.

Mr. TILSON. Then are we not losing a great deal by fraudulent weight, and ought we not to appropriate a larger sum and have it all done and stop the program?

Mr. MADDEN. You can not stop the program because the requirements of the scales are endless; you can not build scales any faster than certain limited facilities which are not there to enable them to build them faster. You have to go along at a certain rate of speed. It is not essential that this class of scale should be used in all the weighing. It is essential that they should be used to weigh sugar and some things like that. They are not necessary for the weighing of other things. They have to have scales that they can move from a place where the trucks are and weigh the stock. These scales are stationary, and the reason they are used on high revenue-bearing imports like sugar is that they want a record made so that it will be clear and plain and nobody can change it. They do not weigh much of the smaller revenue-bearing commodities on that class of scales.

It is a very important thing how long it would take to complete this, and I asked the man in charge of the scales that question. He said that he did not know how long it would take. Then I asked him when he got the plans completed what would happen, and he replied that they would have to begin over again, that the scales first completed would be worn out at that time so that they would have to go on through the program and back again. It is like the man who was running for alderman. He said there were 250 saloons in his district and he was making a saloon campaign. When he got to the last saloon the first one was against him, so that he had to go around again.

Mr. TILSON. My inquiry was aroused by reason of the language—special automatic and recording scales, for weighing merchandise.

If it is important that we should have this particular kind of scale, it seems to me that we ought to have them——

Mr. MADDEN. We have.

Mr. TILSON. And not be getting a few of them each year, so that the first ones will be worn out before the last ones are installed. It seems to me that we are not getting the most efficient service.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if the alderman's district to which he just referred is in Baltimore?

Mr. MADDEN. I would not wonder. For the information of the committee I want now to read a moment from the testimony of Mr. Gast, who testified in respect to these scales:

The CHAIRMAN. In what ports have you already installed the scales?
Mr. GAST. We have these scales at the ports of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Savannah, and New Orleans.
The CHAIRMAN. How nearly complete are they at any point?
Mr. GAST. At New York we have 39 scales complete, and there are 8 scales in course of installation at the present time. I should say we have over 300 scales of various types at the port of New York now. At Boston we have 11 of these scales installed. At Philadelphia we have 23; at Baltimore we have 4; at Savannah we have 6; and at New Orleans we have 10.
The CHAIRMAN. What is the life of these scales?
Mr. GAST. It is hard to say, but I should say it would be about the same as any other substantially constructed piece of machinery, about 12 years, although, I should say, the first scales which were installed in 1910 had the automatic mechanism replaced with a newer modern type of mechanism, and we remodeled the steelwork and the levers, so those scales are as good to-day as they were when they were installed.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there much cost of upkeep on these scales?
Mr. GAST. It runs about $100 per scale per year. That includes the repair parts as well as the cost of the labor (mechanician) employed.

NUMBER OF SCALES PROPOSED TO BUILD.

The CHAIRMAN. How many scales do you expect to build out of the $100,000, and where?
Mr. GAST. I have estimated for eight 5,000-pound scales and two 30,000-pound scales at New York; one additional 5,000-pound scale at Savannah, and one more at Baltimore. That makes exactly $100,000, at the average cost per scale that we are paying at the present time.
The CHAIRMAN. How much is the average cost of the 5,000-pound scale?
Mr. GAST. It will average about $7,000 per scale.
The CHAIRMAN. What about the 30,000-pound scale?
Mr. GAST. For the last one we paid $15,000. That was four years ago. I am hoping to get additional ones at the same price, or possibly for less.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the Government build these scales?
Mr. GAST. No, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. You contract for them?
Mr. GAST. We contract for them. I write the specifications, advertise for bids, and then the lowest bidder gets the work.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MADDEN. Yes.
Mr. BUTLER. What is an automatic scale?
Mr. MADDEN. It is a scale that makes a record of the work that it does.
Mr. BUTLER. But all scales do that.
Mr. MADDEN. This makes it without any human touch on a tape, and the tape is not red.
Mr. BUTLER. And it has no music charms connected with it?
Mr. MADDEN. There may be a liberty bell on it.
The Clerk read as follows:

In all, Federal Farm Loan Bureau, $301,720.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, before we get away from the farm loan business, I move to strike out the last word, because I think it is only fair for me to state for the information of the House that most of the farm loan banks are making money. They have about $4,000,000 surplus, and many of them are paying dividends at the rate of from 6 to 10 per cent. The unfortunate thing that I have discovered in the investigation which I have made is that while the dividends are intended to be paid to the stockholders, or the borrowers, in many cases more than 50 per cent of the dividends goes to the man in charge of the local association, the man who organized the association in the community. There ought to be something done to prevent this. Our committee has no legislative jurisdiction. If we had we would have reported some legislation upon this particular bill to remedy this evil. I think the country should understand, particularly that part of the country which is affected by this action, that when the farm loan banks in any region pay dividends those dividends, of course, are sent through the local association for distribution to the borrowers, and the intention of the law was that the dividends should be paid and to the extent that they were paid they would reduce the interest cost of the money borrowed; but if the money that is paid in dividends is all to be absorbed by the so-called secretary-treasurer, then I think there must be some law to prevent that in the future. In one case in Texas, and I do not remember the location of the local association, the secretary-treasurer of the association absorbed to himself more than 50 per cent of the amount paid by the Federal reserve bank in dividends to the borrowers of that association.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MADDEN. Yes.
Mr. TEMPLE. By what process does he absorb it?
Mr. MADDEN. He pays his salary; he pays his expenses with it. He is the Pooh-Bah. The secretary-treasurer is the man who organizes it.
Mr. TEMPLE. He does not fix his own salary, does he?
Mr. MADDEN. He does. He just takes it.
Mr. BUTLER. And there is no way in this bill by which that amount of money can be reduced. This money does not come out of the Treasury, but it comes out of a fund raised by another bill.
Mr. MADDEN. That is correct.
Mr. BUTLER. And in this committee we have no power over it whatever.
Mr. MADDEN. We have no power to remedy the evil. I have called this to the attention of the House so that some of the gentlemen who are on the Banking and Currency Committee may learn of it and introduce legislation which will provide a remedy to cure the evils to which I have alluded.
Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MADDEN. Yes.
Mr. TILSON. I note that the total amount for the Federal Farm Loan Bureau is very much increased, apparently. It is 25 per cent over what it was last year.
Mr. MADDEN. There is an increase of only $9,000. Thirty-five thousand dollars was in a deficiency act, and it was to carry out the provisions of the law. This is permanent law.
Mr. TILSON. Will this be paid back?
Mr. MADDEN. That part of it is reimbursable.
Mr. TILSON. Just the $35,000?
Mr. MADDEN. That is all.

Mr. TILSON. Otherwise the increase has been about $9,000 only.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I notice elsewhere in this bill, wherever traveling expenses are provided for, it is specified that it should be when the person receiving the expenses is traveling on official business. Twenty thousand dollars is provided here in one part of the paragraph for the traveling expenses of the members of the board. There is no restriction upon it whatever. It simply says for traveling expenses. In other words, in addition to the $10,000 salary, whenever any member of the board or an employee wants to take a trip, he can do so.

Mr. MADDEN. The reason why we did not carry that language is that the law itself provides that the traveling must be on official business. We do not repeat all the language of the law.

Mr. BLANTON. Elsewhere in the bill it is repeated. In providing for traveling expenses you provide that it shall be on official business.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no objection to that being put in here.

Mr. BLANTON. But it is safeguarded in the law?

Mr. MADDEN. It is; absolutely.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words just to make one observation. Members will recall that in the last session we passed two laws in the form of amendments, one to appreciate the interest paid on the bonds from 5 to 5½ per cent in order to make them marketable, so they would be taken by the public. The other was to increase the amount of money in the sum total that might be loaned for the relief of the farmer. I think it might be of value to the Members here to note that while the 5½ per cent is allowed under the law, under the present Treasury administration it is not required; but the last sale was at the rate of 4.2, which means a saving to the Government of 1.3 per cent. I have mentioned that to indicate the success of the financing of the Government under the Treasury Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs to canceling and cutting machines in the office of the Treasurer of the United States, $200.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman about the force employed in redeeming the Federal reserve and national currency, if that is not paid——

Mr. MADDEN. That is all paid by the banks. They have a redemption fund on deposit in the Treasury of 5 per cent of the amount in circulation, and when they send in the money for redemption the cost is taken out of this fund.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. I want to ask if the salaries that are given to these people for doing this important work for the banks are in any way in harmony with the salaries the banks pay their people for doing these things?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know what they are paying their clerks. But they are not doing such important work; it is counting money——

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Do they have clerks counting money in a dingy place where daylight never enters at $900 a year? Does the gentleman think the Federal reserve banks have clerks doing important work at a salary like that?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; lots of them.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is not acquainted with the salaries being paid by private establishments, otherwise he would not rise here and criticize these salaries.

Mr. MADDEN. And the gentleman must also remember they are getting $240 on top of the $900.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. The Federal land banks have been called to our attention where some of the officials are absorbing practically all in salaries.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman is mistaken, I did not make such a statement——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is, the joint-stock land banks.

Mr. MADDEN. No; these are not officials of the land banks. I want to get that out of the gentleman's head. They are officials of the local associations, members of the local associations; the banks themselves are doing no such thing.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. If the private banks are paying their people higher for doing similar work, does not the gentleman think these salaries should be in harmony with what they are paying?

Mr. MADDEN. The salaries are in harmony with what other people on the pay roll are getting. Why should we make them a special class as far as the banks are concerned? We could not do it. There is a law under which they are paid.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. But they were fixed in 1875.

Mr. MADDEN. And there is a reclassification act pending in the Senate. I wish the gentleman would get his two Senators to vote for it.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Passed in 1875, and their work has increased ten times since that time.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY.

Comptroller, $5,000; deputy comptrollers—1 $3,500, 1 $3,000; chief clerk, $2,500; chiefs of divisions—1 $2,500, 2 at $2,200 each; general bookkeeper, $2,000; assistant bookkeeper, $2,000; vault clerk, $2,000; clerks—4 at $2,000 each, 15 of class 4, additional to bond clerk, $200, 21 of class 3, 23 of class 2, 27 of class 1, 14 at $1,000 each, 7 at $900 each; stenographer, $1,600; multigraph operators—1 $1,400, 1, $1,200; clerk-counters—2 at $1,400 each, 4 at $1,200 each; 6 counters, at $840 each; 3 messengers, at $840 each; 5 assistant messengers, at $720 each; 3 laborers, at $660 each; messenger boys—1 $480, 1 $420; in all, $206,440.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman the following question: Can the salaries provided in this bill be increased so as to comply with the reclassification provision which we adopted when we passed that bill?

Mr. MADDEN. When the reclassification act is passed by the Senate and becomes a law, then we should revise the salaries in a special bill and cover that.

Mr. LONDON. But we can not increase the salaries now?

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. LONDON. That would be subject to a point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. That would be legislation.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if he is familiar with the procedure under which the Comptroller of the Currency appears to authorize the establishment of branch banks throughout the country? Was that matter brought up in the hearings?

Mr. MADDEN. No, it was not; and I do not think there is any law anywhere that authorizes branch banks, is there?

Mr. BRIGGS. That is the question I have up before me and which seems to be a subject of complaint. I am getting letters constantly now complaining that the Comptroller of the Currency is apparently authorizing branch banks, or offices as they are called, and I wanted to know under what authority of law he is authorized to grant the establishment of such branch banks.

Mr. MADDEN. I really do not know.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman refer to banks in the District of Columbia or elsewhere?

Mr. BRIGGS. Both.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The branch banks that are being established here in the District of Columbia are under an act fathered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MILLSPAUGH], reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, and passed by the last Congress.

Mr. BRIGGS. This is under alleged general authority operating throughout the United States, as I understand it.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think there is any authority in law for them.

Mr. STAFFORD. If my colleague will permit, the present Comptroller of the Currency, Mr. Crissinger, takes the position that the existing law gives him authority to establish offices. There is a division of opinion among the bankers of the country as to whether the national banking act should be amended so as to authorize national banks to establish offices in States where the State banking institutions are privileged to establish branch banks; but at the last meeting of the National Bankers' Association in New York, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRIGGS] is well aware, that association passed overwhelmingly a resolution protesting against the establishment of a system of branch banks. Fundamentally, for my part, I am opposed to the establishment of a system of branch banks from seeing its actual effects in Canada, which I had occasion to observe in seasons when I have been out of Congress.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does the gentleman know under what authority of law the comptroller acts in authorizing the establishment of these offices? They are simply nothing but banking offices, where banking is carried on just as it is carried on in the larger institutions.

Mr. STAFFORD. No Comptroller of the Currency prior to the present official ever assumed that he had that authority. From time to time in the consideration of the Federal reserve act there have been provisions authorizing the establishment of branch banks, but those provisions have gone out, either in conference or in the House.

Mr. BRIGGS. The gentleman's committee took no action on that?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; because it is not within our legislative power.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For special examinations of national banks and bank plates, keeping macerator in Treasury Building in repair, and for other incidental expenses attending the working of the macerator, and for procuring information relative to banks other than national, $2,250.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 13180) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. REED of New York, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Katherine L. Cushing (H. R. 13316, 65th Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HOCH, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BURTON, for two days, on account of official business elsewhere.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 8, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

786. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting 651 reports of inspections of disbursements and transfers by officers of the Army received in the office of the Inspector General during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922; to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

792. A letter from the chairman of the Public Utilities Commission, transmitting a report of the official proceedings of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia for the year ended December 31, 1921, and also the balance sheets and other financial and statistical data of the several public utilities for the year ended December 31, 1921; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

793. A letter from the Director of the United States Botanic Garden, transmitting a report relative to travel performed on official business from Washington to points outside the District of Columbia; to the Committee on Appropriations.

794. A letter from the Acting Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a report giving the aggregate number of publications issued by the Department of Agriculture during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922; to the Committee on Printing.

795. A letter from the Acting Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a report showing the publications received and distributed by the Department of Agriculture during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922; to the Committee on Printing.

796. A letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting statement of publications issued by the Post Office Department during the fiscal year 1922; to the Committee on Printing.

797. A letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting statement showing what officers or employees have traveled on official business from Washington to points outside of the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922; to the Committee on Appropriations.

798. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting annual report of the Department of Justice for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

6553. Also, petition of Mr. Haut and others, of Gackle, N. Dak., to abolish discriminatory tax on small-arms ammunition and firearms; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 8, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, along the track of our history we have abundant evidences of Thy great goodness. Thou hast been with us as a people in many of the great emergencies which confronted us. We believe Thou art the same God, the God of our fathers, and our God, too. We humbly ask that Thy help may be had in the perplexing problems of this hour, and so lead us onward that in every department of service Thine approval may be realized. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

WILLIAM B. MCKINLEY, a Senator from the State of Illinois, and A. OWSLEY STANLEY, a Senator from the State of Kentucky, appeared in their seats to-day.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Calder	Couzens	Dial
Bayard	Capper	Culberson	Dillingham
Brookhart	Caraway	Cummins	Fernald
Broussard	Colt	Curtis	Fletcher

George	Ladd	Norris	Sutherland
Gooding	La Follette	Phipps	Townsend
Harreld	Lenroot	Poindexter	Trammell
Harris	Lodge	Pomerene	Underwood
Harrison	McCumber	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Heflin	McKellar	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mass.
Hitchcock	McKinley	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.
Johnson	McLean	Shortridge	Warren
Jones, N. Mex.	McNary	Smith	Watson
Jones, Wash.	Moses	Smoot	Weller
Kellogg	Nelson	Spencer	Williams
Kendrick	New	Stanley	Willis
Keyes	Norbeck	Sterling

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Reresentatives by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to House Concurrent Resolution 75, providing for a joint session of the two Houses of Congress on this day at 12.30 p. m., for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. MOORE of Virginia a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution in place of Mr. Padgett, deceased.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the concurrent resolution of the House be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 75, which was read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
December 8, 1922.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Friday, the 8th day of December, 1922, at 12.30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

CREDENTIALS OF SENATOR LA FOLLETTE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a certificate of the Governor of Wisconsin, certifying to the election of ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, as a United States Senator for the term beginning March 4, 1923, which was read and ordered to be filed, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
THE STATE OF WISCONSIN,
Executive Department.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 7th day of November, 1922, ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Wisconsin a Senator from said State, to represent said State in the Senate of the United States, for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1923.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State of Wisconsin to be affixed. Done at the capitol in the city of Madison, this 2d day of December, in the year of our Lord, 1922.

[SEAL.]

JOHN J. BLAINE,
Governor.

By the Governor:

ELMER S. HALL,
Secretary of State.

NAVAL MANEUVERS IN BAY OF PANAMA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, which will be read:

The reading clerk read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, December 7, 1922.

SIR: The United States Fleet composed of the combined forces on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts will be engaged in tactical exercises in the Bay of Panama from the 12th to the 23d of March, and a part of this force will conduct certain important gunnery experiments in the same locality between the 26th and 30th of March, which it is felt certain Members of Congress may wish to see.

The Navy transport Henderson, which is regularly employed in transporting naval personnel and freight between the United States and ports in the West Indies, is scheduled to sail for those ports on or about the 4th of March.

With very little difficulty, and with a minimum of expense involved, the schedule of the Henderson could be so modified as to permit her going from the West Indies to Panama Bay. Should the Congress, particularly those Members composing the Naval Affairs Committees and the naval subcommittees of the Appropriation Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives and representatives of the Foreign Affairs and Foreign Relations Committees, express the desire to witness the above exercises, I should be pleased to have reserved for their use the available accommodations on the Henderson.

In addition to the opportunity which this affords to witness our fleet in maneuvers, I might add that this trip will give such Members of Congress as can take advantage of it an opportunity to inspect our naval stations in the Canal Zone, our island possessions of St. Thomas, the administration of Santo Domingo, the military government of Port au Prince, and our naval station at Guantanamo.

The schedule of this trip of the Henderson can be so arranged as to enable the Members to embark after the adjournment of Congress, March 4, 1923, and to return to Washington by April 13.

It now appears that there will be accommodations approximately for 60 passengers over and above those belonging to the Navy. The only cost to such Members as are able to take the prospective trip will be $1.50 per day for subsistence and 15 cents per day for laundry.

An early determination of the wishes of Congress is desired in order that plans may be formulated.

Respectfully,

EDWIN DENBY.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

(Copy to the Speaker of the House.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will lie on the table for the information of the Senate.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney General, transmitting the annual report of the Attorney General of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REGENT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the House of Representatives, which will be read:

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
December 7, 1922.

The Speaker appointed Mr. MOORE of Virginia as member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution in place of Mr. Padgett.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KENDRICK presented a resolution of the Fremont County (Wyo.) Woolgrowers' Association, favoring the passage of the so-called Capper-French truth in fabric bill, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by General Teamsters and Chauffeurs Local Union No. 307, of Cheyenne, Wyo., protesting against any modification of the immigration laws permitting the entrance of a larger number of immigrants into the United States, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Shoshone Project Water Users' Association, of Powell, Wyo., favoring relief from difficulties arising out of economic conditions which have impaired the ability of the settlers to meet their obligations to the Government, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. LADD presented a resolution adopted by the Commercial Club of Fordville, N. Dak., favoring the enactment of legislation to stabilize the prices of farm products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KELLOGG:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 254) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, it was—

Ordered, That the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] be assigned to service on the Committee on Banking and Currency, the Committee on Education and Labor, the Committee on Mines and Mining, and the Committee on Naval Affairs.

EXCESS EARNINGS OF RAILROADS.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I submit a resolution calling for certain information from the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I ask that it may lie on the table to be called up at a later day.

The resolution (S. Res. 379) was read, ordered to be printed and to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas by the section numbered 15a of the interstate commerce act, which was added by the Cummins-Esch Act, the Interstate Commerce Commission, after the termination of Federal control, was required to group the railroads of the country, and to adjust rates so that an aggregate fixed percentage return, specified in said section, should be earned upon the aggregate value of all such railroads; and

Whereas it was stated in said section 15a that the rate making provisions therein contained would enable some carriers "to receive a net railway operating income substantially and unreasonably in excess of a fair return upon the value of their railway property"; and

Whereas with the purpose of recovering a part of such unreasonable excess, and of securing the use of the same for the benefit of the public in the promotion of interstate commerce, it was provided in said section that any road that should receive such excess income should hold one-half of the excess above 6 per cent upon the value of its railway property "as trustee for the United States," and that the amount so held in trust should "within the first four months following the close of the period for which such computation is made be recoverable by and paid to the commission for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a general railroad contingent fund"; and

Whereas it is now almost three years since the termination of Federal control, and it is reported that many railroads, under the rates which have been fixed through the application of the provisions of said section 15a, have earned in excess of 6 per cent upon the value of their railway property, but have failed to make report of the same to the Interstate Commerce Commission, or to pay over one-half of such excess to said commission, and in disregard of the trust created by said section, have devoted all of said excess to their own uses; and that 13 great railroad systems will increase their dividends this year; and

Whereas it is reported that none of the railroads have paid over to the commission any excess earnings under said section 15a, and that in fact all the railroads of the country which have received earnings in excess of 6 per cent have, with few exceptions, failed to pay over one-half thereof, or any part thereof, to the commission for the uses and purposes provided by said section: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be requested to report to the Senate the following information:

1. The "rules and regulations for the determination and recovery of the excess income," payable under section 15a, which have been prescribed by the commission.

2. The Class I railroads which have made reports to the commission as to their earnings in excess of 6 per cent; the value of its railway property claimed by each; the excess earnings admitted by each; the value of the railway property of each as found by the commission under section 15a, in each case where a tentative or a final valuation of the same has been made, and in each case where no such valuation has been made, the nearest approximation to the value which can be readily reported, according to the rules and regulations applicable for the determination thereof, prescribed by the commission; the excess earnings of each such railroad computed according to the value so found or determined; and the amount of excess earnings paid to the commission by each such carrier.

3. All other Class I railroads which, from any reports made by the same to the commission, annually, monthly, or otherwise, appear to have received in excess of 6 per cent upon the value of their railway property; the value of such property of each, found or approximately determined as aforesaid; and the excess earnings of each computed according to such value, or the nearest approximate estimate of the same which can be readily reported.

4. Each railroad other than a Class I railroad that has reported any excess earnings to the commission under section 15a; the value of the railway property of each, as claimed by it; the excess earnings admitted by it; the value of the railway property of each such railroad as found or determined by the commission as aforesaid; the excess earnings of each such railroad as computed on such value so found or determined by the commission; and the amount of excess earnings paid by each such railroad to the commission.

5. The aggregate of excess earnings which remain payable to the commission from all railroads, according to the provisions of said section 15a, as computed by the commission, or the nearest approximation or estimate thereof, which the commission can readily report; and the items which make up the aggregate, to the extent that the same have been separately computed or estimated.

6. Whether any railroad which has failed or refused to make any report as to excess earnings required by such rules or regulations as the commission may have prescribed, or to pay over one-half of such excess earnings in accordance with the provisions of said section 15a, has made any statement of its grounds or reasons for such failure or refusal; and, if so, the name of each such railroad, with a copy of such portion of such statement as sets out such grounds or reasons.

7. As to any railroad or railroads appearing to have received in trust for the United States excess earnings which remain payable to the commission, according to the provisions of said section 15a, the steps or proceedings taken or begun by the commission to enforce payment of the public moneys so unlawfully retained; and be it further

Resolved, That the commission be requested to make report of the information called for by the foregoing resolution not later than January 1, 1923, if the same can with reasonable diligence be prepared for transmittal before that date; and if the same can not all be so prepared by that date, that it then make report of all information which can be at that time transmitted, and that it make a supplemental report as soon thereafter as may be practicable, completing the information called for.

REPORT OF NATIONAL FOREST RESERVATION COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, before morning business is closed I wish to call attention to the fact that on Wednesday, December 6 last, the Vice President laid before the Senate the annual report of the National Forest Reservation Commission, but through inadvertence the usual provision for the printing of the report as a Senate document was not made. I now move that the report, with its accompanying illustrations, be printed as a Senate document.

The motion was agreed to; and the order was reduced to writing as follows:

Ordered, That the letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of the National Forest Reservation Commission, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys on the 6th instant, be printed as a Senate document, including the illustrations accompanying the same.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar under Rule VIII is now in order.

The bill (S. 214) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1467) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1016) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States" was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being objected to, the bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 67) authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to hold hearings here or elsewhere and to employ a stenographer to report the same was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 491) to provide, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 7) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real-estate brokers in the District of Columbia," approved February 4, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being objected to, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2391) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign-trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That bill can not be considered this morning, and I therefore ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2228) to amend certain sections of the Judicial Code relating to the Court of Claims was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8331) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let this bill be passed over.

The resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing transportation for dependents of Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2718) to provide for leasing of the floating dry dock at the naval station, New Orleans, La., was announced as next in order.

Mr. CALDER. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being objected to, the bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2589) to amend section 11 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," approved January 15, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 67) for the relief of the heirs of Adam and Noah Brown was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

WATSON B. DICKERMAN, ADMINISTRATOR.

The bill (S. 1539) for the relief of Watson B. Dickerman, administrator of the estate of Charles Backman, deceased, was announced as next in order, and was read.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], who introduced the bill, make a short statement as to what effect the passage of the bill will have upon perhaps hundreds of similar cases. It grows out, I presume, of a claim on account of leakage allowed under existing law, but I am quite sure that there are hundreds and hundreds of such cases, and I am wondering whether the Senator can not in a brief statement explain why this bill should pass.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, this bill has been introduced a number of times; it has been reported from the Committee on Claims of the Senate at least a half a dozen times, and it has passed the Senate twice. It is true that claims for leakage may be made by other corporations or individuals who have withdrawn liquor from bond, but if the Senator will examine page 5 of the report he will find that in a number of cases cited there legislation of a similar nature has been enacted for the relief of others.

There is no doubt, Mr. President, that the record will show that the claimant is entitled to the refund. He paid the money in good faith, believing at the time he paid it that he was paying an excess, but he was compelled to pay it in order to get his goods from the warehouse, where they were stored. It seems to me, while it is a very late day, it is a very meritorious measure and ought to be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, my attention was distracted for a moment. Will the Senator state what the bill is which he desires to have passed?

Mr. CALDER. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that this claim grows out of an overpayment on the withdrawal of liquor from bond. The overpayment was due to the fault of the revenue officer. This case has been repeatedly recommended for favorable action by the department, and there are many precedents for it. If the Senator will look on his calendar of bills he will find a report upon this bill from the department, and on page 5 a number of precedents are cited.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

Mr. LODGE (at 12 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.). Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess in order that it may fulfill the terms of the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, in which the Senate has concurred, and now proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered, and the Senate will now proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

Thereupon the Senate, preceded by its Sergeant at Arms and by the President pro tempore and the Secretary, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

[The address of the President of the United States this day delivered at a joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress will be found in the proceedings of the House of Representatives, page 212.]

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 1 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m., and the President pro tempore resumed the chair.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 9, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 8, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, may the marvel of creation, the wonder of redemption, and the strangeness of our preservation stir our gratitude and thanksgiving day by day. Lead us to think how dependent we are upon Thee and to appreciate the clear manifestations of an all-merciful God. May we know Thee, whom to know is eternal life. Be Thou with our President, his fireside, and all who are associated with him in authority. Bless our Nation and ever keep over it a pure and undefiled repro-sentative government. That we may have the best and avoid the worst, may all citizens understand that Christian character and high intelligence must be the dominant notes in the progress of the Republic. Blessed Lord, endow us more and more with clean conscience, clear vision, and broad understanding. And Thine shall be the praise. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

JOINT SESSION.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 75.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Friday, the 8th day of December, 1922, at 12.30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its chief clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

House Concurrent Resolution 75.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Friday, the 8th day of December, 1922, at 12.30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

VESSELS OF WAR THAT HAVE BEEN SCRAPPED.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Naval Affairs on House Resolution 457.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 457.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the House of Representatives full information touching the number of vessels of war that have been scrapped or disposed of by the United States and other powers who were participants in the Conference on Limitation of Armament, since the adjournment of that conference, and including vessels of war whether defined by any treaty signed at that conference or not.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, this is unanimously reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FROTHINGHAM], who introduced the resolution, was present at the time we considered it and is entirely satisfied with it. Therefore I move the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, quite a number of Members have made inquiries as to the probable length of the holiday recess of the House.

In view of the importance of disposing of the program of appropriations and the legislative program before the House, I think there is a general agreement among the Members that there should not be a long recess during the holidays. What I now have in mind is at the proper time to ask unanimous consent that when we adjourn on Saturday, December 23, we adjourn until Wednesday, December 27, giving us a recess of two days, Christmas and the day following.

I have not discussed with Members the matter of the recess over New Year's to any considerable extent, but my present thought is that the New Year's recess should be over New Year's Day only, or possibly the day following; but as matters now stand in the legislative program it would not seem wise to have a longer recess than over Monday, New Year's Day.

I shall not make these requests now, as I desire to discuss the matter further with gentlemen of the minority and some Members on this side; but my understanding is that the arrangement I have suggested will be fairly satisfactory to the membership of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House now stand in recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess, subject to the call of the Chair. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess.

JOINT SESSION OF SENATE AND HOUSE.

At 12 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m. the members of the President's Cabinet entered the Hall and took seats on the left of the Speaker's rostrum.

The Doorkeeper announced the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Members of the Senate.

The Senate, preceded by their President pro tempore and their Sergeant at Arms, entered the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate took the chair at the right of the Speaker, and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as a committee on behalf of the House to wait upon the President and escort him to the Chamber the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate. On behalf of the Senate the Chair appoints the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER].

At 12 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m. the President of the United States, escorted by the committee of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall of the House, was announced by the Doorkeeper, and stood at the Clerk's desk amid applause on the floor and in the galleries.

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT.

The PRESIDENT. Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, Members of the Congress: So many problems are calling for solution that a recital of all of them, in the face of the known limitations of a short session of Congress, would seem to lack sincerity of purpose. It is four years since the World War ended, but the inevitable readjustment of the social and economic order is not more than barely begun. There is no acceptance of pre-war conditions anywhere in the world. In a very general way humanity harbors individual wishes to go on with war-time compensations for production, with pre-war requirements in expenditure. In short, everyone, speaking broadly, craves readjustment for everybody except himself, while there can be no just and permanent readjustment except when all participate.

The civilization which measured its strength of genius and the power of science and the resources of industries, in addition to testing the limits of man power and the endurance and heroism of men and women—that same civilization is brought to its severest test in restoring a tranquil order and committing humanity to the stable ways of peace.

If the sober and deliberate appraisal of pre-war civilization makes it seem a worth-while inheritance, then with patience and good courage it will be preserved. There never again will be precisely the old order; indeed, I know of no one who thinks it to be desirable. For out of the old order came the war itself, and the new order, established and made secure, never will permit its recurrence.

It is no figure of speech to say we have come to the test of our civilization. The world has been passing—is to-day passing—through a great crisis. The conduct of war itself is not more difficult than the solution of the problems which necessarily follow. I am not speaking at this moment of the problem in its wider aspect of world rehabilitation or of international relationships. The reference is to our own social, financial, and economic problems at home. These things are not to be considered solely as problems apart from all international relationship, but every nation must be able to carry on for itself, else its international relationship will have scant importance.

Doubtless our own people have emerged from the World War tumult less impaired than most belligerent powers; probably we have made larger progress toward reconstruction. Surely we have been fortunate in diminishing unemployment, and our industrial and business activities, which are the life-blood of our material existence, have been restored as in no other reconstruction period of like length in the history of the world. Had we escaped the coal and railway strikes, which had no excuse for their beginning and less justification for their delayed settlement, we should have done infinitely better. But labor was insistent on holding to the war heights, and heedless forces of reaction sought the pre-war levels, and both were wrong. In the folly of conflict our progress was hindered, and the heavy cost has not yet been fully estimated. There can be neither adjustment nor the penalty of the failure to readjust in which all do not somehow participate.

The railway strike accentuated the difficulty of the American farmer. The first distress of readjustment came to the farmer, and it will not be a readjustment fit to abide until he is relieved. The distress brought to the farmer does not affect him alone. Agricultural ill fortune is a national ill fortune. That one-fourth of our population which produces the food of the Republic and adds so largely to our export commerce must participate in the good fortunes of the Nation, else there is none worth retaining.

Agriculture is a vital activity in our national life. In it we had our beginning, and its westward march with the star of the empire has reflected the growth of the Republic. It has its vicissitudes which no legislation will prevent, its hardships for which no law can provide escape. But the Congress can make available to the farmer the financial facilities which have been built up under Government aid and supervision for other commercial and industrial enterprises. [Applause.] It may be done on the same solid fundamentals and make the vitally important agricultural industry more secure, and it must be done. [Applause.]

This Congress already has taken cognizance of the misfortune which precipitate deflation brought to American agriculture. Your means of relief and the reduction of the Federal reserve discount rate undoubtedly saved the country from widespread disaster. The very proof of helpfulness already given is the strongest argument for the permanent establishment of widened credits, heretofore temporarily extended through the War Finance Corporation.

The Farm Loan Bureau, which already has proven its usefulness through the Federal land banks, may well have its powers enlarged to provide ample farm production credits as well as enlarged land credits. It is entirely practical to create a division in the Federal land banks to deal with production credits, with the limitations of time so adjusted to the farm turnover as the Federal reserve system provides for the turnover in the manufacturing and mercantile world. Special provision must be made for live-stock production credits, and the limit of land loans may be safely enlarged. Various measures are pending before you, and the best judgment of Congress ought to be expressed in a prompt enactment at the present session. [Applause.]

But American agriculture needs more than added credit facilities. The credits will help to solve the pressing problems growing out of war-inflated land values and the drastic deflation of three years ago, but permanent and deserved agricultural good fortune depends on better and cheaper transportation. [Applause.]

Here is an outstanding problem demanding the most rigorous consideration of the Congress and the country. It has to do with more than agriculture. It provides the channel for the flow of the country's commerce. But the farmer is particularly hard hit. His market, so affected by the world consumption, does not admit of the price adjustment to meet carrying charges. In the last half of the year now closing the railways, broken in carrying capacity because of motive power and rolling stock out of order, though insistently declaring to the contrary, embargoed his shipments or denied him cars when fortunate markets were calling. Too frequently transportation failed, while perishable products were turning from possible profit to losses counted in tens of millions.

I know of no problem exceeding in importance this one of transportation. In our complex and interdependent modern life transportation is essential to our very existence. Let us pass for the moment the menace in the possible paralysis of such service as we have and note the failure, for whatever reason, to expand our transportation to meet the Nation's needs.

The census of 1880 recorded a population of 50,000,000. In two decades more we may reasonably expect to count thrice that number. In the three decades ending in 1920 the country's freight by rail increased from 631,000,000 tons to 2,234,000,000 tons; that is to say, while our population was increasing less than 70 per cent, the freight movement increased over 250 per cent.

We have built 40 per cent of the world's railroad mileage, and yet find it inadequate to our present requirements. When we contemplate the inadequacy of to-day it is easy to believe that the next few decades will witness the paralysis of our transportation-using social scheme or a complete reorganization on some new basis. Mindful of the tremendous costs of betterments, extensions, and expansions, and mindful of the staggering debts of the world to-day, the difficulty is magnified. Here is a problem demanding wide vision and the avoidance of mere makeshifts. No matter what the errors of the past, no matter how we acclaimed construction and then condemned operations in the past, we have the transportation and the honest investment in the transportation which sped us on to what we are, and we face conditions which reflect its inadequacy to-day, its greater inadequacy to-morrow, and we contemplate transportation costs which much of the traffic can not and will not continue to pay.

Manifestly, we have need to begin on plans to coordinate all transportation facilities. We should more effectively connect up our rail lines with our carriers by sea. [Applause.] We ought to reap some benefit from the hundreds of millions expended on inland waterways, proving our capacity to utilize as well as expend. We ought to turn the motor truck into a railway feeder and distributor instead of a destroying competitor.

It would be folly to ignore that we live in a motor age. The motor car reflects our standard of living and gauges the speed of our present-day life. It long ago ran down Simple Living, and never halted to inquire about the prostrate figure which fell as its victim. With full recognition of motor-car transportation we must turn it to the most practical use. It can not supersede the railway lines, no matter how generously we afford it highways out of the Public Treasury. If freight traffic by motor were charged with its proper and proportionate share of highway construction, we should find much of it wasteful and more costly than like service by rail. Yet we have paralleled the railways, a most natural line of construction, and thereby taken away from the agency of expected service much of its profitable traffic, for which the taxpayers have been providing the highways, whose cost of maintenance is not yet realized.

The Federal Government has a right to inquire into the wisdom of this policy, because the National Treasury is contributing largely to this highway construction. Costly highways ought to be made to serve as feeders rather than competitors of the railroads, and the motor truck should become a coordinate factor in our great distributing system.

This transportation problem can not be waived aside. The demand for lowered costs on farm products and basic materials can not be ignored. Rates horizontally increased, to meet increased wage outlays during the war inflation, are not easily reduced. When some very moderate wage reductions were effected last summer there was a 5 per cent horizontal reduction in rates. I sought at that time, in a very informal way, to have the railway managers go before the Interstate Commerce Commission and agree to a heavier reduction on farm products and coal and other basic commodities, and leave unchanged the freight tariffs which a very large portion of the traffic was able to bear. Neither the managers nor the commission saw fit to adopt the suggestion, so we had the horizontal reduction, too slight to be felt by the higher-class cargoes and too little to benefit the heavy tonnage calling most loudly for relief.

Railways are not to be expected to render the most essential service in our social organization without a fair return on capital invested, but the Government has gone so far in the regulation of rates and rules of operation that it has the responsibility of pointing the way to the reduced freight costs so essential to our national welfare. [Applause.]

Government operation does not afford the cure. It was Government operation which brought us to the very order of things against which we now rebel, and we are still liquidating the costs of that supreme folly.

Surely the genius of the railway builders has not become extinct among the railway managers. New economies, new efficiencies in cooperation must be found. The fact that labor takes 50 to 60 per cent of total railway earnings makes limitations within which to effect economies very difficult, but the demand is no less insistent on that account.

Clearly the managers are without that intercarrier, cooperative relationship so highly essential to the best and most economical operation. They could not function in harmony when the strike threatened the paralysis of all railway transportation. The relationship of the service to public welfare, so intimately affected by State and Federal regulation, demands the effective correlation and a concerted drive to meet an insistent and justified public demand.

The merger of lines into systems, a facilitated interchange of freight cars, the economic use of terminals, and the consolidation of facilities are suggested ways of economy and efficiency.

I remind you that Congress provided a Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry which made an exhaustive investigation of car service and transportation, and unanimously recommended in its report of October 15, 1921, the pooling of freight cars under a central agency. This report well deserves your serious consideration. I think well of the central agency, which shall be a creation of the railways themselves, to provide, under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the means for financing equipment for carriers which are otherwise unable to provide their proportion of car equipment adequate to transportation needs. This same agency ought to point the way to every possible economy in maintained equipment and the necessary interchanges in railway commerce.

In a previous address to the Congress I called to your attention the insufficiency of power to enforce the decisions of the Railroad Labor Board. Carriers have ignored its decisions, on the one hand; railway workmen have challenged its decisions by a strike, on the other hand.

The intent of Congress to establish a tribunal to which railway labor and managers may appeal respecting questions of wages and working conditions can not be too strongly commended. It is vitally important that some such agency should be a guaranty against suspended operation. The public must be spared even the threat of discontinued service.

Sponsoring the railroads as we do, it is an obligation that labor shall be assured the highest justice and every proper consideration of wage and working conditions, but it is an equal obligation to see that no concerted action in forcing demands shall deprive the public of the transportation service essential to its very existence. [Applause.] It is now impossible to safeguard public interest, because the decrees of the board are unenforceable against either employer or employee.

The Labor Board itself is not so constituted as best to serve the public interest. With six partisan members on a board of nine, three partisans nominated by the employees and three by the railway managers, it is inevitable that the partisan viewpoint is maintained throughout hearings and in decisions handed down. Indeed, the few exceptions to a strictly partisan expression in decisions thus far rendered have been followed by accusations of betrayal of the partisan interests represented. Only the public group of three is free to function in unbiased decisions. Therefore the partisan membership may well be abolished, and decisions should be made by an impartial tribunal. [Applause.]

I am well convinced that the functions of this tribunal could be much better carried on here in Washington. Even were it to be continued as a separate tribunal, there ought to be contact with the Interstate Commerce Commission, which has supreme authority in the rate making, to which wage cost bears an indissoluble relationship. Theoretically, a fair and living wage must be determined quite apart from the employer's earning capacity, but in practice, in the railway service, they are inseparable. The record of advanced rates to meet increased wages, both determined by the Government, is proof enough.

The substitution of a labor division in the Interstate Commerce Commission, made up from its membership, to hear and decide disputes relating to wages and working conditions which have failed of adjustment by proper committees created by the railways and their employees, offers a more effective plan. [Applause.]

It need not be surprising that there is dissatisfaction over delayed hearings and decisions by the present board when every trivial dispute is carried to that tribunal. The law should require the railroads and their employees to institute means and methods to negotiate between themselves their constantly arising differences, limiting appeals to the Government tribunal to disputes of such character as are likely to affect the public welfare. [Applause.]

This suggested substitution will involve a necessary increase in the membership of the commission, probably four, to constitute the labor division. If the suggestion appeals to the Congress, it will be well to specify that the labor division shall be constituted of representatives of the four rate-making territories, thereby assuring a tribunal conversant with the conditions which obtain in the different rate-making sections of the country.

I wish I could bring to you the precise recommendation for the prevention of strikes which threaten the welfare of the people and menace public safety. It is an impotent civilization and an inadequate government which lacks the genius and the courage to guard against such a menace to public welfare as we experienced last summer. [Applause.] You were aware of the Government's great concern and its futile attempt to aid in an adjustment. It will reveal the inexcusable obstinacy which was responsible for so much distress to the country to recall now that, though all disputes are not yet adjusted, the many settlements which have been made were on the terms which the Government proposed in mediation.

Public interest demands that ample power shall be conferred upon the labor tribunal, whether it is the present board or the suggested substitute, to require its rulings to be accepted by both parties to a disputed question.
